Coverdisks p6

Tactical Manager Italia

Get to grips with the glamorous world of Italian football thanks to our exclusive demo from Black Legend. It's so big it takes up two whole disks, but we've managed to get it on to one so you can play it to your heart's content. Are you good enough to beat the best in Serie A?

Dreamweb

Last month's front cover is this month's cover demo! Scoring 92%, Dreamweb was one of the highest scoring Amiga games this year. For sheer originality then look no further. Read the disk pages for a full rundown on what to do.

Ace the Space Case

Exclusively programmed for your favourite magazine, this is the first in a double helping of coverdisk platform mayhem this month. It's a cracker.

Charlie J Cool

Elsewhere in this magazine you'll be able to read a full review of this charming little platform game from Rasputin. Now you get the chance to have a go yourself and make your own mind up about it. NOTE: The disks are slightly different this month so please make sure you read the loading instructions carefully before doing anything.

Good things come in small packages they say. Well, that's a load of tosh. When was the last time you got a really good thing in a small package? Did your Amiga come in one? No. Did say, your hi-fi or television come in a small package? No they did not. Anything decent comes in a damn big package, and that, readers, is an extremely convoluted and contrived way of saying that this month's superb disks have come presented to you in a rather strange manner. We've got an exclusive version of Black Legend's Tactical Manager Italia on disk one, which is absolutely huuuuuge! So huge in fact that you'll need two disks to play it! Don't worry, all is explained later on, as indeed is the relevant information for the rest of our reamtastic demos, the sinister Dreamweb, and happy platform romps Ace the Space Case and Charlie J. Cool. All that and the chance to get five branded disks absolutely free – can you honestly say you don't want to marry us? All we ask is that you have a quick look at the instructions on these pages before you ram the disks in your machine. It's a very simple process, and if you like it, it will enable us to bring you loads more games for your money in the future. Enjoy, chums...

Cover Disks

Tactical Manager

We've added a twist to all the demos this month in order to get as much stuff on the disks as possible. What you'll have to do is have some blank formatted disks at the ready to decompact everything on to, or, in the case of Tactical Manager Italia, which is quite possibly the biggest and most packed demo we've ever had, two disks. Luckily we're giving you the chance to get your hands on five, so that's okay.

Insert disk one into your drive first of all. Once all the information has been stashed into your computer's memory, you'll be invited to press a key to continue. It may be a good idea to follow this advice. That done, you'll be asked to replace the coverdisk with the first of your formatted ones, and to press [return]. By this time you will no doubt be whistling a few bars of The Sun Has Got Its Hat On because of the mirthful anticipation you are feeling, but within seconds, you'll be forced to stop this and replace your disk with the second formatted one, again pressing [return]. Soon you will have a beautiful two disk demo on your hands, and here's what you do.

At the outset you'll have to choose a team from the Italian Serie B, the idea being that you have to prove yourself in order to progress into Serie A. Every single option from the completed game is available for you to use – tactics, editors, transfers, substitutions – well, everything, you get the message. You have 11 weeks of the Serie B season (which includes the odd cup game and so on) to prove your worth as a top flight manager, which basically means you need some fairly convincing results right from the off. If at the end of this period

Ace the Space

In order to play this demo of Scott Haynes' excellent shareware game, it might be an idea to insert disk two into the drive. You'd also be well advised to press [3] to get things rolling. Insert (when asked) another blank formatted disk into the drive, and Ace will decompact after another very brief spell of [return] pressing. After that, it's hot platform action all the way with the rather oddly named Basil Bagoo.

Basil has been dumping toxic waste, and Ace (the aforementioned Space Case presumably), in this demo at least, has come to the rescue, generally being quite heroic through three levels as he attempts to clean up the vile mess.

The options screen allows you to select from several difficulty levels, and an exceptionally nice touch is the ability to horizontally flip the levels, providing a slightly fresh challenge for anyone who completes it. Quite why this is included is beyond me, but it is, and it's good.

Ace is armed with up to nine rockets and an unlimited supply of bombs as he

your success rate isn't too great, you'll be invited to have another stab. If however, your team are playing superb football under your guidance and the points are racking up, then at any point during those 11 weeks, some Serie A teams will become available to manage.

The chances are these won't include the likes of AC Milan or Sampdoria, as it would take longer than a few weeks to become worthy of these giants, but most others will crop up provided you do okay. Again, everything from the proper version is here, including the new Euro Cup groupings in which you can participate should you be skilful enough to manage the appropriate team.

The Serie A season lasts for nine weeks, giving you just enough time to get to know your squad and groom them to your style of play.

A save option is included, as indeed is the option to print your tables, commentaries etc. at any time. The demo alone should take you an age to master, so without further ado, let's check out what's next in our special December disk fest.

Charlie J Cool

Place disk two into your drive and select the demo by pressing [2]. The on-screen prompt will tell you to insert your formatted disk into the drive and depack it by pressing [return]. After about a minute, the demo will be ready to play on your now Charlifed disk.

You control Charlie in a mutated version of the first level of the game. By selecting the options you can decide whether Up or Fire makes him jump, and whether or not, by keeping the Fire button pressed, Charlie jumps in a frenzied fashion or simply stops after one leap. The intention of course is to reach the end of the level, but to do that you have to find the golden key. You will need to avoid the bugs and obstacles, or better still, jump on them to gain extra points. The coins give you extra points too, and along the way you'll come across "power-downs" of sorts, which tip the screen upside down for a time or even send it black and white.

Three lives should be enough to get you through, but if they're not, the continue option will no doubt come in handy. Anything else you should know? No, so go ahead and play it.

scampers up the level to his goal. Bombs are activated by pressing fire, and they'll roll and bounce if you keep the button held down, exploding only on its release. Rockets are launched by pressing fire and then holding the button down, and of course you must avoid the robotic animals and deadly spikes unless you fancy losing your lives and dying. Erm, which is basically one and the same thing.

Anything else you need to know is explained in the game, so there's no need to go into it here. And please remember, if you do find you like this demo, take note of the address and have a butcher's at the real thing.

Dreamweb

Empire's epic murder'em-up is soon to be making an appearance on the shelves of your local software outlet, but seeing as we're so thoughtful, we've provided you with the chance to give it a go and test your skills in this exclusive Amiga Action demo. The first thing to do is to put disk two into the drive and select Dreamweb for De-packing. Make sure you have a blank, formatted disk handy, and follow the simple on-screen instructions. Once you are told that the operation has finished, simply re-boot with your spanking new Dreamweb disk in the drive.

The demo itself has absolutely no sound whatsoever, so don't be expecting the wonderful, atmospheric musical score that the finished version of the game has. If we'd have waited for a version with sound we were looking at a big delay and we wouldn't have been able to get it to you so early.

It's all controlled using the mouse, with a click on an area of the screen with the left mouse button taking the character to that specific point, and a click with the right mouse button using an object if the inventory is selected.

You are carrying the correct equipment to complete most of the demo, but you might have to pick up one or two items to finish it all off. The inventory has three pages which can be flicked through by clicking on the number, and all the items can be manipulated from there. Handy or what?

No hints this month, but if you ask nicely we'll print the solution to the demo in next month's Small Tips. It's all logical so you probably won't need 'em if you're any good.

Five BBC Disks

In case you haven't noticed, we're giving away five rather tremendous BBC disks this month, and information on how to obtain them is on the back of the voucher. So, read it without delay and enjoy yet another top free gift from Amiga Action. Yes, that's what you must do.

What it's all about...

By the time you've got around to actually using the first coverdisk, you will have discovered that we've gone about things a bit differently this month. Before you can play any of the demos you will have to decompact them on to a separate disk. We make no apologies for this. It is entirely deliberate. We here at Amiga Action have made a conscious decision to get the coverdisks as crammed full of stuff as possible. You're paying nearly four pounds for our magazine so we're going to make sure you get the ULTIMATE value for money. We believe the way ahead is to crush programs to such a large degree that you have to unpack them yourselves. You've all got old disks lying around the house and it enables us to give you even more every month. You save money as a result by having the opportunity to test more games before paying for them. We've employed the best in the business to make the unpacking as painless as possible. It really is a doddle and it only takes a minute. To get you started we're even giving you five free disks this month. We'd obviously like to hear your views on the new system as quickly as possible, so write and let us know what you think about it all.

Duff Disks

Because we duplicate in excess of 40 billion disks every month it stands to reason that one or two won't work, and we're sorry if you're one of the unlucky ones. It isn't too big a deal though. Just return the faulty disk (after checking it countless times) to our disk buddies at: TIB, TIB House, 11 Edwards Street, Bradford, West Yorks, and they'll have a working version with you in a jiffy.

First word

Right you lot. Paul's off to exotic Kos this week so I'm the lucky one who gets to do this bit. Firstly I'd like to say hello to anybody who knows me, my mum, dad, girlfriend, old Mrs Watson down the street. Ahem, now that's out of the way I'd better tell you what's in this month's mag before I go any further and run out of space. Well, you can find our EXCLUSIVE (oooh!) reviews of Rise of the Robots and Skeleton Krew later on, but whatever you do, don't forget to send off for your freebie disks. They're there waiting for you. And may I also take this opportunity to thank everybody at The One for their humorous facsimile message. Oh, bye Simon. Thanks for making us laugh! Good stuff. See ya later....

CHICKEN

Mr Telephone Man

Modems enjoyed a period of being the most popular computer add-on about seven years ago, but since then, they've dropped away more or less completely. However, all that has changed over the past few months, and just about everybody is talking about Internet and just how wonderful it is. Most of the people who know anything about it want to get on it, but if you're not at all sure what's going on, it's all a bit of a jargon minefield.

As briefly as possible, Internet is just what it sounds like – an international network of computers that you (yes you) can access easily with a modem. If you fancy making friends with people in the USA, Russia or just about anywhere else, then bar a power cut, there's nothing stopping you. All you need is a modem and some decent comms software and you're away.

As well as the Internet, more and more Bulletin Board Systems (BBS) have a selection of Amiga software and utilities ready to be downloaded. It's all PD and utilities, but that isn't a bad thing when you consider it only costs the price of a telephone call. See next month's AA for more information on this and also how you can get hold of other users via e-mail as opposed to Snail Mail! Wow!

Staying Indoors

Last month we previewed the excellent Football Glory from Black Legend. As far as Sensible beaters go, this couldn't be any closer. Elsewhere in this issue you'll find a full review, but for the moment we bring you news of a new version of Football Glory that's only in the planning stages at the moment.

An indoor version of the game is on the cards – something that has only ever been attempted by the ancient MicroProse Soccer before. Richard Holmes from BL reckons that Football Glory is the only soccer game to use real-time calculation on ball bounces, which means that when a ball comes off the post, the angle of rebound is worked out to make the ricochet as accurate as possible. Thus meaning your reactions have to be that bit more faster than before.

Using this system he reckons it's a logical step to introduce walls, as in indoor soccer. Nobody else has been able to do it because of the complexity of the routines, but Black Legend claim to have sussed it out!

The game, which should be out in the first quarter of 1995, will feature lots of different rules (five-a-side, six-a-side etc), as well as funny shaped pitches to add to the fun. Final specifications have yet to be decided though.

It all sounds like good, clean football fun to us and we'll bring you more news as and when we have it. In the meantime watch out for some Christmassy Football Glory fun in next month's festive issue.

...FREE DISKS! YES!...THE LION KING...COMPETITION

Floppy Bonanza

Attached to the front of this month's magazine you should have found a small voucher (this offer is unfortunately unavailable to overseas readers). If it wasn't there and you didn't notice, it's probably too late to complain to your newsagent now. If you did, then you might be wondering what's going on.

Blank disks are a recurring problem for everybody. You've got to level 10 of Sonic Chaos or whatever, and you desperately need to save your game 'cos you're going out to play footy with your mates. Now you have three choices at this stage. The first is to turn off your machine and try to get to the same spot tomorrow. Alternatively, you can be late for your mates and risk getting laughed at for playing computer games. Or finally, you can pop in one of the five, branded BBC blank disks you can get simply by returning the voucher to the address on its rear.

It's definitely worth it. All you pay is postage. These disks aren't poor quality, second hand jobs. They're brand new and just waiting to be despatched to you. So what are you waiting for?

COMPETITION TIME

Remember last month when we were trying to give away a load of our old games because we'd moved and were trying to tidy up? Well this month we've got a load more. We estimate there's about £400 worth of software waiting for the lucky chap/ess who sends in the best photo of them when they were a baby. The cuter, the messier, the sadder the better. Get rid of those embarrassing snaps by sending 'em in to us to laugh, er, I mean look at. We promise to print the winner.

Like a Lion in Zion

What the bloody hell was that song all about? Bob Marley, now there was a bloke that could confuse people. Anyway, the only connection between Mr. Marley's ditty and Virgin Interactive's new game, is the word "lion". Yes, fearsome king of the jungle, hunter, stalker and ermmm king-like. Yep, that just about sums up lions alright. Where were we? Oh, The Lion King, that's right.

Later on in this issue we take a look at the amazing Amiga version of Aladdin, and just before going to press we received news from Doug Johns at Virgin (he used to work for Amiga Action in the old days you know) that the team responsible for that, are about to embark upon a conversion of the Mega Drive version of The Lion King from Disney. (That's the one with all the Elton John songs in it, so presumably they're in a bit of a dilemma about the soundtrack. Amiga Lion King with music by Elton John! Doesn't quite sell it to you does it?).

Now if Aladdin is anything to go by, Virgin are going to be starting the new year with a rare old bang. So, watch this space in our Christmas Special for a full preview. Failing that, we'll fill it with something else equally as interesting... probably.

...MORE GORY BLOOD...MOUSE NEWS...AS I RAGE

STOP PRESS - Mortal Kombat 2!

Yes kids. It's the news you've been praying for, and we received it about three seconds before going to press. Here goes! Acclaim have announced that they will be doing one of the most successful ever sequels for the Amiga and that it'll be out before the end of the year. Probe Software have been signed up to do the conversion, and bearing in mind they also converted the excellent original, there is no reason to believe that the standard here will not be maintained.

When you consider the clamour to get hold of the title on other formats, it is difficult to see another game beating it to the Christmas Number One spot, providing it hits the streets in time. This could severely dent Sensible Software's hopes of having the top three this year. All this is pure newsie speculation, but we believe MKII is guaranteed phenomenal sales whatever.

The fact that this game is coming out on our machine will give a huge boost to the Amiga. Watch out for a full review (touch wood) next month, where our Christmas Special promises to be very special indeed! Don't miss out, get all the latest information on the new characters, moves and anything else we might find on our travels.

I Saw a Mouse

Well that headline's straight out of the classic computer mag cliché books, but it's still quite relevant because this bit is all about mice. Wizard Developments have been in touch to let us know about their new range of Amiga mice, and we thought you might like to know too!

Well, they've got two models on offer. The first is the imaginatively titled Normal Mouse, which will only set you back a tenner and looks like a fine replacement for your existing worn out mouse. You can even switch it between Amiga and ST modes, which we're sure most of you will find extremely handy!

Second up is an Optical Mouse and it costs an extra tenner. We could go on for ages with amusing 'no balls' gags, but we won't, because we're all in a mature mood. What you get is a mouse with no ball that operates by shining a light on to a metal mat or something like that. Anyway, it saves cleaning it every five seconds. If you're keen on either product you'll be glad to know that Wizard offer free UK delivery, 28 days money-back guarantee and two years warranty. They can be contacted on 0322 272908.

Rage against the Machine

They're a nice bunch down at Time Warner and they're also involved with some of the next generation of big arcade releases. Primal Rage just happens to be one of them.

Now in case you didn't know, Time Warner Interactive used to be known as Atari Games, but that's just a bit of trivia to keep fact-fans going. Primal Rage is a beat'em-up that uses a, wait for it, "proprietary new stop-motion animation technique that provides incredibly lifelike character action."

The game has already been billed in some corners as next year's Mortal Kombat, and the good news is that it will be appearing on the Amiga late next year. It may seem like a long time to wait, but a little patience never goes amiss.

So what's a nice girl like you doing in a place like this? Well, pictures of pretty young ladies can be downloaded in abundance although pornography is on the decline on the majority of systems

Left: And this is what it's all about. After you've logged onto a BBS you'll generally be treated to page after page of text-based menus. Some of the more advanced systems use a style of graphics similar to the Teletext system you can receive on your TV, but for the most part, coloured writing is the best you'll get. Not that that's a problem!

Modems. You know they're a little box that you connect to your computer and into the telephone. Then what? Good question, because potentially the world is your oyster. In this first instalment of a two part Amiga Action special, we'll be telling you a little bit about your own personal gateway to the world. If you've already heard the words Internet and BBSs bandied around, you're halfway there already. If you haven't, then the next few minutes could be quite surprising. Anyway, read on...

Chicken's story

About nine years ago I got my first modem. It was nothing special, in fact it was positively archaic by today's standards, but it was a modem. I was in a position that many of you are in now. You know what one is, you know roughly what they do, but you've no idea as to what use you could actually put one to.

I had an Amstrad at the time and this modem was linked into that. I managed to bribe my parents to get me an account on British Telecom's Micronet service (this was a huge system, similar to Teletext, except you could connect your computer to it via the phone line and talk (well type) to other people.) It was sort of like CB with keyboards instead of voices. This might seem a bit sad, but it's all too easy to get hooked. After a while I started reviewing games for an online Amstrad section, and that is one of the reasons I'm here today.

For reasons too numerous to mention, a lot of Micronet subscribers walked out on the service in 1987. It seemed that the hundreds of thousands of regular users would now be relegated to the smaller Bulletin Board Systems (BBSs) where only one caller was allowed on line at a time. The social aspect was now defunct and people didn't want to know.

Users dropped out of the scene in droves, me included. However, suddenly it's trendy to be in communications again. BBSs are springing up at a rapid rate, and with all the publicity, more and more people are discovering a handy thing called the Internet.

'It's the happening area of the industry at the moment. Everybody is getting in on the act as the modem strikes back as the add-on of the nineties...'

The Internet has been growing for years, but is something a lot of people have never known about. For one reason or another, magazine after magazine and author after author have begun to inform people about this worldwide network of computers that can be accessed via a local system. Virtually everyone who hears a little about it cannot fail to be impressed by its CV. This is the point where I am willing to accept that some of you won't have the faintest clue of what I'm talking about. So, it's time for a little lesson in basic modeming!

What's what?

A modem is a device that allows your computer to communicate with others, regardless of make or size. The modem is the leveller. It interprets between the two machines and explains to each of them what's going on (and probably does a better job of it than I'm doing here to be honest!) Now because these machines are connected by signals sent down a telephone line, it is possible

The whole system tends to be operated through a series of easy to use menus. Select what you want, press the corresponding key and a new menu appears, and so on

Caught in the Net

Right: Logging on to a system for the first time can be a bit of a pain. It is vital to keep your password safe, as access will be denied if you lose it, potentially causing a lot of grief to link machines anywhere in the world and exchange data of whatever sort.

A good example of this is the Football Glory review in this month's magazine. It was beginning to look a bit touch and go as to whether we'd get the game in to review this issue. We couldn't rely on Royal Mail, so we got in touch with Richard and Chris down at Black Legend in London. We connected our two modems, and 20 minutes later we were playing the finished version of the game near Manchester. Impressive eh?

This is just a simple example of how a modem saved our skin. Fortunately, the chances of you needing 800k of data in half an hour if you are to keep your job (just kidding boss) are pretty slim. So what can be done with a modem in everyday practice?

My other car's a Porsche

Before we go into too much detail, it's important that I tell you a little bit about the technical side of things. All modems have what's known as a Baud rate. Put simply, this is the rate at which the device can translate information between the two systems. The higher the Baud rate, the faster it can operate.

For example, my first modem was a 1200 Baud. This meant that it could send and receive 1200 bytes per second. The one I have now is a 28,800 baud modem, which would have been unheard of at that time. Obviously it pays to have as fast a modem as possible, because if the transfer is quicker, you aren't using the telephone for as long. And with the extortionate prices we get charged (although they are coming down all the time) this is obviously vitally important.

What do I connect to?

Believe it or not, there are thousands of BBSs throughout the UK, and millions around the world. These systems are generally free of charge to use (excluding the price of the phone call of course). You'll come across file libraries of stuff just waiting for you to take (file transfer from a host machine to yours is called Downloading). Usually you'll have to "Upload" something every now and then, as nobody likes a freeloader. Obviously none of this stuff is commercial, but you can find handy utilities and game demos as well as recipes for quiche and so on.

Pirates are frowned upon by sensible SysOps (system operators – the people who run the BBSs) as they can get into a lot of trouble and have their gear confiscated if they are caught. Pornography is all under the counter on most systems too, so if you're a parent, the worry of this is not as large as it once was. The penalties for carrying material of an obscene nature are also heavy.

While it is fair to say that the majority of BBSs cater mainly for the PC, an awful lot have an Amiga section. Some boards are Amiga specific and we'll be giving you more details about these in part two next month.

Standard practice...

They might be free, but all boards require you to register with them. This is because of red tape such as the Data Protection Act. Registering generally means supplying the owner with your name, password, address and telephone number, as well as other boring details about yourself. This is no cause for worry, because the DPA protects your information and is on your side.

Another reason for passwords is so that other users can leave what is known as e-mail. This may be private correspondence, and if you didn't have a codeword then anybody could read it couldn't they? We'll be going into all this in far more detail next month, so don't worry about it just yet.

Next month...

Ooops! We appear to be out of space. Next month we'll be telling you everything you need to know about electronic communication, including what you need to do to get on line, how to find the specialist BBS systems for the Amiga, and more information about the Internet in general. If you have any comments, address them to Paul McNally and send them to the address at the front of the mag. Next month we'll be giving you a full e-mail address too! Cheers.

Every game in Amiga Action is given the mark we feel it deserves.

Computer games are entertainment, and we mark all of the games largely on the enjoyment factor they are likely to provide. Sound, graphics, originality and gameplay are all scrutinised by us, your friendly know it alls. Price rarely enters into the equation, although a particularly expensive game (or the opposite) may be looked upon in a slightly different light. Basically, it all equates to value for money. A picture of the hardware the game is created for is shown on every review, and unless it is an enhanced or specific version, the machine will be an A600 (which also covers the A500).

We know you aren't daft (most of you) and leave you to interpret the mark for yourself. If the game plays significantly differently on another Amiga machine, we'll tell you in a differences box, and if it doesn't we'll save ourselves the trouble and not bother. Make sense?

No, thought not.

ACTION REVIEW

SHOOT'EM-UP

A1200

Joint has the amazing ability to walk in one direction while at the same time spinning around and firing at anything that moves. The control method is very difficult to get the hang of at first but soon gets a lot easier

Some pretty impressive enemies are to be found lurking within the confines of Skeleton Krew, including some of the best end-of-level guardians I have ever seen. There's even two of the things on the final level for good measure

Have Core Design re-invented the shoot'em-up? An unusually excited Steve McNally seems to think so

Skeleton Krew

I've been on this magazine long enough now for any regular reader to realise that, in general, shoot'em-ups do little or nothing for me. For some reason I find it very difficult to get excited about them. Perhaps it is their mindless nature that puts me off. Level after level of wanton destruction with little or no point to the game provides no incentive to progress any further (sounds a bit like Speed I suppose).

If ever a software house was going to come up with a game of this type that would interest me, it would have to be Core. Their last three efforts in this area (excluding the ever so slightly dodgy Cyberpunks) have all been fine examples of the genre. Blastar, Banshee and now Skeleton Krew have all pushed back the boundaries of the shoot'em-up.

You can choose to play as any one of three very different characters

It was difficult to see anyone bettering Banshee this year, but that is exactly what is going to happen if Core manage to get this out before the new year (a feat they are confident they will achieve).

Skeleton Krew exploits the Cyberpunk craze to good effect with a cast of characters which they hope will interest the readers of comics such as Judge Dredd and 2000 AD (or are they the same thing?).

As Core's marketing machine shifts into gear on this one, they hope to turn Joint - the heavy hitter, Rib - the blazin' babe and Spine - the Krew Kapitano (their words, not mine) into the next big thing with a merchandising blitz that could turn into the computer game equivalent of The Flintstones.

However, all that is irrelevant really, and what is important is the eye of the storm itself, the game, and it doesn't disappoint in any way.

Some really nice effects have been cunningly programmed in. There are walls you can walk behind, and even more impressive, a sewer level

The graphics have been completely overhauled from the far less colourful MegaDrive version

That swirly white thing may look nice, but it's dumping the aliens all over the place. Unfortunately, you can't destroy it either, so deploying your weapons its general direction is a bit of a waste of time

Krew

The control system is extremely difficult to get to grips with, at least it is with the preferred two-button joystick/pad method. Basically, the characters are capable of rotating the top halves of their bodies by a full 360 degrees, effectively enabling them to fire any way they want, without having to change their direction of movement.

Boney M

This is achieved by making use of the right button to rotate to the right, the left button to rotate to the left, and both buttons simultaneously to fire in the last direction the top half of your body was facing. It sounds complicated, and to be honest it is. Bloody tricky is the phrase that leaps immediately to my mind.

I'd like to say that it soon becomes easier, but to be honest, it doesn't. It starts off extremely hard and even after some considerable time playing, is still hard.

Perseverance does pay off in the end, although I must admit to spending much of my time spinning around uncontrollably, arms aloft, in a not too dissimilar fashion to the legendary Paul Roundell, on an embarrassing Saturday night out in Xanadu's, Rochdale (not a pretty sight I can tell you).

The other control method, the one-buttoned joystick, is simpler, but a lot of the complexity is lost as a result. Basically, whenever you press the fire button you will fire in the last direction you were facing. Far more conventional, but far more boring and mindless.

Skeleton Krew took a lot longer than Core imagined to develop. I always find it reassuring when a software house holds back a product, because although it may be frustrating to see a game's release date constantly slip further and further back, you at least know that the publishers in question are determined to get it right and not release a sub-standard product. A lot of the delay was due to Core's commitment to getting the characters and scenario just right, and and to be honest, the attention to detail in every department is downright astonishing.

Each character has their own signature weapon, for example, Joint has the Krash 'n' Burn Blaster – a standard bazooka which can be powered up to the nasty sounding Ravage II Wreander. This can blow up the entire body with a single, explosive round, punch holes in inanimate objects and cause any vehicle to explode. Nice.

There are many other delightful sounding weapons such as the Slice 'n' Dice Trunkator, the Tri-blast Trasher and the Missile Maniak.

My particular favourite has to be the F-Flenzer. I don't know what the name means, but this certainly could be termed a weapon of mass destruction. Whirling blades (fired as deadly

Each character has a highly detailed, carefully thought out background, and this all helps to create the right atmosphere for the game. Shame I don't like cyberpunk stuff really shuriken) will tear the flesh from any unsuspecting enemy.

You may be wondering why all of these weapons are necessary. In fact, I know you will, because I've just realised that I've completely forgotten to mention anything of the storyline. Instead of going back and rewriting the start of the review, I thought I'd cunningly slip it in without you noticing. Clever eh?

Well, there's this bloke see, and he intends to take over the solar system by building a whopping great weapon known only as the Psycho Machine. He's called Moribund Kadaver by the way, in case you're interested.

The game takes place over six massive levels as the Skeleton Krew and Kadaver's Dead Inc. race against time to collect the components required to build the deadly weapon. The levels are based throughout the solar system, on Earth, Venus, Mars and Kadaver's own artificially created planet, Psyogenesis, the headquarters of the dreaded Dead Inc.

Each planet also has an end-of-level boss. Now you would be forgiven for thinking that this means there are six end-of-level guardians, but oh no. Being Core, they had to try and go one better. That means seven end-of-level bosses, two of which come on the last level. And they are huge. I'm not kidding. When you see one of these boys coming at you, you back off. At least if you're me you do. But then perhaps that's why I don't last that long.

The quest will take you from one end of the universe to the other as you travel from Mars to Pluto. The levels remain essentially the same throughout, but after all, it is a shoot 'em up. What else can you expect?

Anyway, as the Krew progress through the levels, you'll begin to notice that there's something a little amiss here. Now this is supposed to be a shoot'em-up isn't it? Well what's it doing having little puzzley bits in it then? Eh?

It has to be said, the end-of-level guardians are absolutely enormous

Action fans needn't panic, it's nothing that's going to tax your addled brains too much. It certainly couldn't be called a puzzle game, but it is a feature nonetheless and there can be no denying it. Admittedly, the toughest it gets is turning off a forcefield by shooting at something, but it does serve as a mild distraction, and is one of the reasons I like Skeleton Krew so much.

I'm not into the whole Cyberpunk thing at all to be honest. I don't like Manga and haven't read a comic since I was fourteen, but it is impossible not to see its appeal, and very difficult not to get drawn in by the stuff. I felt a strange affiliation with the Krew and their cause by the time I was finished, and it's something I would definitely see through to the end if I had the time or the skill (and I have neither).

Goombay Dance Band

To my knowledge, no-one has ever done a 3D isometric shoot'em-up before – I think mainly because they thought it couldn't be done. Core have slaved away over the game for a good while now, and the finished product shows that it has certainly been worth the effort. There are some real jaw dropping effects, a lot of which are very subtle, and the animation is superb.

The characters strut around as if they own the screen (and who am I to argue), and the way they go up and down stairs on to different levels is enough to impress me.

You also have the ability to walk behind walls and hole yourself up in an alcove for added protection. There are a ton of other nice touches that struck me while I was playing, but annoyingly escape my feeble brain at this very moment. Never mind.

Ok, I give in. I can't do it. I've got an enormous caption box in front of me and what have I got to work with. The options screen. Well that's just great

The level design is highly varied throughout the game and helps to keep the player interested. This naturally provides a good incentive to keep plugging on

One of the things that impressed me most is that each of the levels is multi layered, allowing the player to climb stairs, jump down uninjured from a great height and leap tall buildings in a single bound

The simultaneous two player option is undoubtedly the most fun. You and your partner must co-operate and work well as a team if you are to succeed

This is superb. It almost pains me to say it about a game of this type, but it's true. As shoot'em-ups go, I can't think of any I would rather be playing, and I'm sure that I won't be the only one to hold that opinion. The game is highly polished, looks great, plays well, is exciting, and while highly challenging, is not too difficult to put people off. Core have another great game and money making opportunity on their hands, and if they manage to get it out for Christmas, which I'm sure they will, a high festive chart position is virtually guaranteed.

REVIEWED BY STEVE

SECOND OPINION

This always happens doesn't it? A game like the one over the page arrives and blows us all away, and within days something else goes even further. This is an absolute stonker of a shoot'em-up and A1200 owners should prepare their incontinence knickers right this minute.

Skeleton Krew is a real shock to the system and has gone a long way to opening my eyes to the merits of a good shoot'em-up. Thinking about it, they are not as commonplace as they were a year ago anyway. Then it seemed like every other game was a shoot'em-up. No matter how good or bad the product was, it was rush released in much the same way as platform games are today.

It looks at last as though the genre has matured sufficiently, and producers have begun to realise that there is far more to be said for spending time on a game and getting it just right than sticking it in a box half finished and selling about ten copies.

Core are on to a winner with this one. If a game can convert me to an arena that I previously wasn't keen on then it must be good. I'm not easily swayed on anything, and for a single product to manage it is unheard of. Skeleton Krew has managed to do this, and in future, when any shoot'em-up comes in, I'll be first in the queue to review it. That's something I never thought I would hear myself say. A

SHOOT 'EM - UP

It is possible to have complete control over the view in Guardian, although to be honest I found that the original preset view was by far the best one available. Stick to that one if you ask me

You're taking far too many hits. Better get out of there as soon as possible or you're going to explode

If you've been looking for a reason to buy a super, wondrous CD32, you no longer have an excuse, I'm afraid. Oh, apart from the fact that you probably can't find any shop that's selling the things at the moment, thanks to the long running saga concerning the future of Commodore.

Well, hopefully, when that's sorted, all your excuses are out the window. Actually, if anyone at the future Commodore or Amiga Ltd or whatever the name turns out to be, has any sense, they will be making serious efforts to get this game bundled with the machine, thereby enhancing its appeal considerably.

I've heard it said that Guardian can do for the CD32 what Sonic the Hedgehog did for the MegaDrive. And, having played the finished version for quite some time now, I find it difficult to disagree. Programmed by relative newcomers, Acid Software, the game is an unashamed, no nonsense blaster in the all-action mould.

The game is set in a rapidly shrinking universe, sometime in the future. Why the universe is shrinking isn't clear, all you are told is that it is only a few light years in diameter, sort of a reverse big bang if you will. Millions of life forms are now battling it out for possession of the few remaining resources, conveniently giving themselves an

Guardi

Oh my God, it's finally happened. We thought it never would, but a game specifically written with the CD32 in mind is here. And it's stunning excuse not to worry about the impending disaster that lies around the corner.

You have been selected as a Guardian (hence the title I suppose), one of an elite troop of pilots charged with protecting what is left of the human species. Your mission is to repel the relentless attacks of alien life forms on a series of populated planets. The responsibility that lies on your shoulders is a heavy one, as you are secure in the knowledge that should you fail, the human race will face certain destruction.

I would like to tell you something about the Er, ahem... Neil had taken over from me playing the game at this stage. Cough, splutter, etc..

The comprehensive options screen even allows you to configure the control pad to your liking

The droids are dropped from a large green mothership thing. This can return even after you think you've finished

I haven't worked out whether destroying this is any use or not

Ah, success at last. Don't be fooled though, Guardian is far harder than it looks

The intro sequence is possibly the least exciting part of what is otherwise a thrill a minute game. I don't suppose it matters that much though an

rewards you receive should you succeed in your goal, but when you play Guardian, you will realise just how difficult it actually is. Hence I haven't got on to the third level (there are ten altogether, apparently), let alone finished the thing.

If you've ever played Super Nintendo Starwing/Starfox, then you will have a good idea of what to expect gameplay wise. However, Guardian is far less linear than its counterpart, allowing you the freedom to roam around the combat arena at will. The similarity comes in the graphics and the all-action gameplay style so successfully utilised by the geezers at Nintendo.

Acid have 'borrowed' certain elements from Starwing, reworked them, improved things generally and come up with, what is in effect, an all round better game.

There are ten planets to conquer, and you move on to the next when you have cleared three zones of Dronoids (alien craft that float around with the sole intention of destroying your buildings and installations).

You have an array of weaponry at your disposal, including lasers, smart bombs and tracking missiles. You also have a shield as a last line of defence.

The lasers have unlimited fire, but the smart bombs and tracking missiles are strictly limited, and you should try and use them sparingly. But I

The ship explodes as the incompetent Neil takes the controls once again. Of course, if I was playing, this would never have happened must admit, it is far too tempting to use them to get you through the earlier levels which you find yourself playing time and time again.

Simplicity

It's funny you know, normally I can't bring myself to go over the same ground time and time again, but with Guardian it doesn't seem to be a problem. Perhaps the key lies in it's simplicity, and the fact that the levels don't change that much anyway. I suppose it doesn't really matter which level you're playing, it's all pretty much the same high speed, no let-up action. A

If you own a CD32 then you really shouldn't hesitate in dashing out to buy this the instant it's released. Acid have done the impossible and followed up Skidmarks with a game that actually is even more impressive than their last excellent effort. If you don't own a CD32, I wouldn't go as far as to say you should buy one purely on the strength of one game. But, if this is the standard that can be reached, and programmers are going to start putting the effort in to produce it, then the machine's future should be very rosy indeed. A big round of applause for Acid. Wahey.

REVIEWED BY STEVE

SECOND OPINION

Acid have shown us once again that they are a force to be reckoned with, Guardian is an excellent and difficult shoot'em-up, arriving at just the right time to give the CD32 a much needed boost. I can't wait for the New Zealanders' next effort.

ACTION REVIEW SPORTS SIM

England's vital statistics aren't as good as they should be at half time. The mighty Brazil are well on top

There's only one way to look at this in order to give it a fair and unbiased review, and that's to see it in complete and utter isolation. Every single football game to get a release in recent years has been compared in some way – big or small – to That Which We Know So Well, and understandably so. Certain games equal That Which We Know So Well in one particular way, while others aspire to its greatness by borrowing one or two ideas.

By and large, each game is compared to That Which We Know So Well simply because That Which WKSU is the number one in its field.

Only a blind mongoose wearing a steel balaclava back to front can have failed to notice that Football Glory indeed "borrows one or two ideas" from this certain unmentionable effort, but let's just forget about that for a moment and concentrate on the game itself.

Surprise surprise as the Croatian team are all included! Hang on, that looks like the programmer's name

A look at this will show you just how detailed the players in the game actually are

Football Glory

The year is drawing to a close, but those software people just won't let up in their quest for the definitive football game

The Croatian arm of Black Legend have gone for the tried, tested and proven method of the overhead perspective, and the fundamentals of the game take a widely familiar path.

You can choose to play as a Premiership or Division One team, and enact a full length season. Or, if you prefer, you can customise the length of the season and the teams in it to suit yourself. A number of international teams are also kindly provided for your usage (hmm, the famous Croatian side seem to have snuck in there too...), and on top of that, there are various pre-set and customisable cups you can enter, including the European Cup Champions League and the World Cup qualifiers.

Because Black Legend are responsible for Tactical Manager, they have access to the hundreds of apparently accurate player statistics that are included in that game. These have been used to define each player's abilities here, providing us with teams which perform according to the collective talents of the individual players.

To be fair to the lad

Now as far as gameplay goes, there is only so much you can do with a football game without taking it into the realms of the ridiculous. I'm sure power-ups, exploding nets and cartoon bombers invading the pitch would add to the challenge, but then it wouldn't exactly be football would it?

Oh, I attempted to make a point there, but seem to have failed miserably. Perhaps I'd better move on swiftly before the Irrelevance Police cart me off [They'd have to get in there first before the Boring Police – All].

Liverpool line up a free kick against the Everton wall. Will the goalie guess right or not?

► Football Glory

Okay, well here's what happens in the game. A sort of "it happened to me", if you will.

Twenty two individually skilled players run on to one of a variety of pitches and line up. They're small but well detailed, and a tap of the joystick sees them take up their positions on the field. It all looks and feels very familiar. So far.

Another tap of the button and I've kicked off – the match is on. Running upfield now, defender advancing, and I need to dribble round. A deft waggle of the stick should do it, but I've got to be careful. Here goes – careful now... done it! – I'm round. That was easy, the ball stuck beautifully to my player's foot. Hmm, perhaps that isn't so good after all – don't want it to be too easy. Let's try again with this defender. Damn it, he got the ball. So it isn't that easy after all – requires a bit of skill. That's very good indeed.

Early doors

Uh-oh, under attack... lunge tackle... miss... try again – foul! Hang on, my man's saying something. There's a speech bubble over his head and he's protesting his innocence. The ref (yes, he's there) is having none of it.

While the trainer runs on to the pitch and sprays the opposing player's mis-shapen leg, he scribbles madly in his book and produces a red card. I'm off! Oh well, at least I have the pleasure of seeing the writhing defender stretchered off unceremoniously by two apparently uncaring, white-coated paramedics.

There's little point arguing with the ref mate!

Five men in the wall for the ensuing free kick, ready for the chip. Whhssshh! "Magnificent goal!" Er, it's in the net. I'm a goal down to what was the hardest shot I've ever seen in a computer game, and the opposition are going wild as a sampled commentator opines. Blimey, it looks impressive in the slow motion zoom window too.

Right, let's have a quick reply – psychological boost and all that, you know. Oh come on, what's going on? There's a dog on the pitch for God's sake. It's gone. Okay, here we go.

Round this defender, round that one, advancing on goal, pass to the centre forward, shoot! Oh dear, that was hardly a stinger – looks like I'll have to build up properly and concentrate on shooting from inside the area. Hmm, I suspect I might be enjoying this.

Goal kick. Not too good, it's heading straight for my man. A flick of the stick here should send it back. Whoa! Did he just try an overhead kick there or am I dreaming? No, he definitely tried it. Lummo, imagine if he'd connected...

Must get the ball. Need a few strong challenges I think. There we go – now spread it wide to the winger. Go on man, run! Push the joystick, push it, push it. Aah! He's speeded up. He's running really fast now and I don't know what to do. It must have been pushing the joystick forwards twice that did it. Top speedburst though... nice touch.

In the area now, let's try a shot... angle's tight so I'll need some aftertouch. Shoot... bend... ooh! The aftertouch comes on more quickly than I'm used to, but I like the way you can operate it at the end of the kick as well as the beginning. Not strictly realistic, but nice...

There. Hopefully now you should have some idea as to how the game plays. Alternatively you might be filling out a subscription to another mag, but what do I care, the job is almost done.

As well as the dog, streakers, pitch invaders and other similarly bizarre creatures pop up irregularly enough not to be a pest. The novelty of the various speech bubbles grows thin after a while, but they aren't obtrusive enough to frustrate. And as for the rest of it, it's great. The absolute blandsters will delight to hear that you can save whole matches, and not only that, but on watching them again (I did say absolute blandsters) can join in at any stage and alter the outcome! Anyway, I'm off. Goodbye. A

The tension rises as the first penalty of the shootout is about to be taken by Liverpool

Well, do you go for the English League, the Champions League or one of the others?

Black Legend Croatia have produced an excellent, football game. Yes, it looks like... something else, but it does play quite differently. And, if they say it's all their own work, then who am I to disagree? Besides, in some respects, it goes even further. The power bursts are great, and you can - with much practise - jump over tackles, back-heel the ball and, occasionally, pull off superb overhead kicks. Match statistics are another nice feature, and although it has to be said that That Other Certain Game is, overall, the slightly more polished of the two, this is just as enjoyable to play.

SECOND OPINION

I like this game very much because it enables me to perform tackles on attackers, which unfortunately I am not able to do in real life. However, I can run backwards and allow the opposition to have free shots on goal.

DIFFERENCES

Two real differences on the A1200. The menu screens will be 256 colours and the zoom box will be able to operate whilst the normal sprites move around on screen. The CD32 version, which has yet to be put into production, should feature match commentary throughout.

FLIGHT SIM

Embryo

Flight sims come and flight sims go but nothing much seems to change. One of Black Legend's Croatian teams, Beyond Arts, put their offering to the test

You've all heard about the Croats in the last couple of issues of AA. Black Legend seem to have tied up every bit of programming talent in that particular part of Europe, and they're definitely about to bear the fruits of this relationship over the next few months. You can read about the excellent Football Glory elsewhere in this issue, but one game we haven't really mentioned so far is Embryo.

Flight simulations aren't everyone's bag, so doubtless some of you may be reaching to turn over the page at this very second. Fair enough, see ya later, but remember, you never know what you're missing.

Embryo boasts some of the fastest movement routines I've ever seen on an Amiga. To be fair, the graphics don't really have some of the high detail of other flight sims, but if you want to see just how speedy your machine really is you should

Power-ups can be collected after killing one of the bad guys. These give you much needed weaponry

A direct hit shakes your machine and causes some severe damage

You are treated to secret information on each level

Extending its fingers to most remote parts, the darkness has quietly spread over the planet. A force yet unknown has woven a cobweb over most parts of this unsuspecting planet. The Earth take a look at this as it might well open your eyes quite a bit. These guys certainly know what they're doing as far as getting the best out of the hardware goes.

The plot is quite original for a change. Apparently, millions of years ago, long before humans inhabited the Earth, the planet was inhabited by these alien things. These things (we'll stick to calling them that because I don't know their real names!) died off. But, before they left, they planted embryos deep in the Earth's crust so that they could one day take over again.

Now it's party time for these little beggars, and they're beginning to hatch and wreak havoc all over the world. Being the only person who can save the planet is never easy, and once again, the responsibility to protect the rest of humanity falls on your shoulders.

Separated at birth

So, starting in Australia (I've been there you know), you must obliterate all the alien nasties and stop them taking control. Then it's off to the next continent, then the next. You get the picture. The game is completely mouse controlled, looks a bit like Guardian and plays like a dream. Nice simple controls and beefy sound effects all add to the fun. In between levels there's atmospheric music and a nice full screen bitmapped image to look at while loading takes place. Oh, and you can install it all on your hard drive too!

Not everyone will like Embryo, but if you

like your flight simulations (be warned this gets perilously close to being a shoot'em-up at times), then here's a real toughie to get your teeth into.

You can't knock the presentation of the whole thing. Atmosphere-building seems to have been of key importance here and there's nothing wrong with that. If you can hook your machine up to a hi-fi and turn it right up, then do so, as the in-flight engines and explosions are second to none in this particular field.

There's plenty of quality software coming from abroad at the moment and that can only be good for the future of the Amiga. Give credit to Black Legend for bringing it to our attention! A

It's unlikely you'll see anything faster on the Amiga, but it gets close to being too fast at times. The first level (Australia) isn't a good indication of things to come, as it's all a bit barren and Aussie desert-like. But later on, things start to look quite nice. It's easy to control, smooth and well presented. In fact, it's everything a good flight simulation should be. Take a look in the shops for Embryo, because as action goes, there's only really Guardian that comes close (and that's CD32 only at the moment). Another fine programming effort from the guys in Croatia.

SECOND OPINION

Plane games eh? You either love 'em or hate 'em, and, er, I fall somewhere in between. The attractive thing about Embryo is that it's easy to control the craft (mastery takes a while), and even early on, there's plenty of action for plebs like me.

On the Ball

LEAGUE EDITION

And the flood continues. How many more footy games are we going to get this year? Talk about a glut in the market...

Credit to Ascon, they certainly used the World Cup to their advantage. The On the Ball - W.C. Edition was perfectly timed to coincide with the greatest tournament on earth, and now this League version arrives at prime time with the English season just getting underway.

The original release has been riding high in the charts for the last couple of months, and now there's this version which gives you the chance to manage a league side over a period of ten seasons. The World Cup game could be played and finished within a couple of hours, not so the league equivalent. There's some serious play time to be extracted from this, especially if you are one of the many that enjoyed the World Cup version.

As usual, the A1200 program should be installed on a hard drive, although it can be unpacked onto five disks. The normal version is less demanding, missing out some of the fancier stuff, but filling a more manageable three disks.

Organising tactics is presented in a nice graphical way for a change. Full marks for this

The basics of it all are the same though. Take your chosen team to the top of the Premiership and then gloat for ages!

The team data is fairly accurate, and there is an editor included that allows you to fine tune any late transfers

Signing a big-name shirt sponsor at the start of the season will help to boost your coffers

All the teams from Division One and the Premiership are included, and to start off a season you have to select a sponsor from those offered. This will supply some cash to help strengthen the team during those vital, early stages. There's not a lot else to say really. Pick your team and win the matches (or you get sacked!). All the nice features of the World Cup Edition are present, the hand-drawn match screens haven't changed (love 'em or hate 'em) and the whole thing has obviously had lots of attention lavished upon it.

Some changes have been made, obviously. Gone are the training camp graphics where you watch your guys leg it around a field. Stuff like this has had to make way for leagues, fixtures, top scorers and the like.

Backroom dissent

The better, more unusual features that aren't to be found anywhere else, are still included. After matches, you may still be interviewed by the gutter press, eager to pick up some sordid story of backroom dissent. Whatever you say under these circumstances is bound to be horribly twisted by the time the morning papers arrive on your desk.

To sum it all up, the League edition is the natural progression for those of you who enjoyed the first one, and the challenge is certainly more long-term than before. A

The hand-drawn screens are scanned in and used for the match sequences. Not everyone's cup of tea but...

There is something unique about the World Cup edition. Nobody had really managed a national team management game before, but Ascon did the business. The League edition is up against more direct competition, but still fares remarkably well. Graphically, it's the best of the bunch, but it isn't as in-depth with the statistics as some of the others, and this, in my mind, lets it down a little. This wasn't as apparent before, because the game objective was more short-term. Even with this niggle, I'd still recommend you have a go, because it's a good little game.

SECOND OPINION

I reviewed the World Cup edition and thought that was an absolute ream-fest. Having played the league version, I can see why it was released first. Football fans just have to buy this, even if they have the previous version. In fact, especially if they do. Fantastic stuff.

STRATEGY

You can play the game as either a male or female character, but it doesn't really affect things

Burntime

Strategy games aren't for everyone, but Max Design's latest should be enough to keep those who follow the genre happy

The manual, as you would probably expect, is hefty enough to put anyone off reading it. This inevitably caused me a few problems, as I didn't really have a clue as to what I was doing. Ah well, with a feeling of, "It's my own fault, I should've known better", I embarked upon a mostly uninteresting read, and soon cleared a few things up.

Plot-wise, you are unceremoniously dumped in a very inhospitable Mad-Max 3 style desert world. It's post apocalyptic because there's been a bit of a war you see! Now it's only natural to want to make the best out of a bad scenario, so when the opportunity arises, it's definitely worth taking over the world!

And that's what it's all about. There are 38 towns to capture if the world is to succumb to your power. Some are abandoned and can be just walked into, whilst others will need to be taught a serious lesson before they succumb to your will.

Green theme

All movement is carried out via the map screen, so it is pretty simple to get from one venue to the next. The locations can all be searched, and sometimes useful information or objects can be picked up and

The map screen is where all the "action" takes place. From here, all movement is controlled utilised later on. If you want to get anywhere in Burntime, you will have to spend quite a bit of time looking for stuff which others have casually discarded. Isn't that always the case with adventure/strategy/RPG games though?

There is definitely a green theme to Burntime. You will come across people who have tales of ecological hardship to tell, and there is an attempt to set you thinking about the more serious implications of the exploitation of our planet.

Greenpeace have apparently been consulted about various ecological matters, and they've even managed to get themselves a nice little credit in the manual for their assistance.

The programmers reckon it'll take at least a fortnight of nonstop playing to get anywhere near completing the game – and that's if you manage to do everything correctly.

In some respects, you could possibly put this in the RPG bracket, but the heavy coating of strategy just about forces it there instead. If this is your type of thing, then be interested. It's an original concept for a computer game, and the atmosphere which is generated contributes nicely to the overall effect. A

Towns can be entered at will. It's conquering them that's the problem!

Good strategy fodder for enthusiasts. As click'em-ups go, this does its job and does it well. The presentation is slick and colourful, and as an added bonus, the whole thing can be installed to your hard drive for further convenience. If nothing else, the green theme makes it a bit of a curiosity. There's no point in having a look if you've never been into this sort of game, but if you're looking for a new way to spend some of those approaching winter nights (especially if your girlfriend's disappeared off to Australia eh?), then Burntime could be for you.

SECOND OPINION

I say to the mechanics, I say, "I scared of your shoddy pits technique for I surely get all burnt up." But they just ignore me and say, "The race we need to win – there is no time to mess about you pig." So they go ahead and pour petrol on me and I all go on fire and scream. It was bad.

Sectoid AUTOPSY

The autopsy reveals vestigial digestive organs and a simple structure. The brain and eyes are very well developed. The structure suggests genetic alteration or mutation. The small mouth and nose appear to have little function. The webbing between the fingers, and the flat feet suggest aquatic origins. There are no reproductive organs, and no clue as to how this species can reproduce. They are most probably a genetically engineered species.

UFO: Enemy Unknown promises to provide a combination of strategy and combat

Lemmings suicide shocker

Yes, those cuddly critters are at it again with another game in the making. All New World of Lemmings will feature three different Lemmings Tribes – Egyptian, Classic and Shadow (all wearing traditional costumes!) – and as well as the usual you will now have bad guys to face and trapped Lemmings to rescue.

The improvements made include larger, enhanced sprites, and the many Lemmings' skills have been reduced to a core of the more essential, making it easier to play.

Winning formula

Domark's successful racer F1 is to have a follow up. F1 World Championship Edition is based on the 1994 season and will feature changing weather conditions and artificial intelligence based around the actual 1993/94 driver and team performance. There will be two playing views, one from inside the cockpit and a view from behind and air turbulence which may affect the handling of the car is also included.

It's sequel mania from Domark and not only has an end-of-1994-season update disk for their football management game, Championship Manager, been brought out but a sequel is also planned.

This version will have everything from stereo sound with chants from rival fans, to match sequences with full text commentary. There will also be an enhanced player exchange system and will include the Scottish League.

Virgin's magic carpet

Virgin have teamed up once again with Disney to bring their Aladdin game to the Amiga. Promising all the charm of the original film it is set to be released around November.

The Disney/Virgin collaboration will also be bringing out The Lion King, Disney's new film based around a Lion Cub who is forced into the wilderness and finds refuge with Pumbaa the warthog and Timon the Meerkat.

Vice President of Disney Consumer Products, Steve McBeth commented: "Never before have game players been able to participate so fully in the emotional experience of a film. In The Lion King game, players actually enter the world of the movie, which is brought to life with unparalleled animation, non-stop action and dramatic confrontations."

If flight sims are your cup of tea though you can look forward to Overlord from Virgin and Rowan Software, the creators of Reach for the Skies. The game recreates the experience of the D-Day fighter pilot and will aim to create a highly realistic simulation.

The player takes part in missions that were aimed at gaining air superiority and weakening coastal defences and they will be able to fly Spitfires, Mustangs and Typhoons.

The ground sections involve the player in work back at the base, including briefings and air raids, where he can choose to fight or hide away in the Shelter.

Disney's gorgeous animated adventure brought to the Amiga

Mirage rise to the occasion

One of the stands that attracted rather a lot of attention at the ECTS was Mirage. And why? Because all the versions of their Rise of the Robots game were being shown. Together with Time Warner Interactive, they are bringing out the game on at least ten formats for all Amigas and also for the CD32 sometime in November. Mirage believe it will be "the biggest multi-format launch in games history."

Julia Coombs, Marketing Manager for Mirage said: "The public who have been fed on a diet of Mortal Kombat and Streetfighter 2 will really relish the change that "Rise" provides."

"Rise" boasts that it is the "first game with a fully rendered, morphing character" and "with film quality controllable 3D graphics." Former Queen guitarist, and rock legend Brian May will be providing music for the game with two tracks from his solo album, "The Dark" and "Resurrection" being used.

They are also venturing onto the coin-op market with Bell-Fruit Manufacturing and a coin-op version of the game will be out soon.

The game will be backed up with a huge pre-launch marketing campaign including TV commercials and bus shelter ads, so look out for the distinctive looking sprites at a bus stop near you!

Rise - "The biggest multi-format launch in games history"

Tough Kompart-ition

Publishers Kompart are planning quite a few releases for the Amiga, with games from developers such as Croatian Black Legend, NEO, Max Design and Arcane. Among those from Black Legend we can expect to see Embryo, a vector shoot-'em-up, Spherical Worlds, another shoot-'em-up but using a top view instead, similar to that used in Alien Breed.

New UK publishers, Arcane, are working on Turbo Trax, an over-head racing game where you can choose to race 4x4 jeeps, dune buggys, sports cars and 4x4 trucks!

Golf is great, golf games are great and PGA European Tour from Ocean is destined to be great. The Dome, developers unfortunately remembered more for their less auspicious efforts like The Last Action Hero than successes like Bob's Bad Day, have returned to top form with this excellent conversion of EA's Mega Drive success of the same name.

This is part of the Ocean/EA tie-in that will bring around six of their most popular recent Mega Drive extravaganzas to the Amiga, and the series has got off to a real flyer. If all the games achieve the standard of European Tour, then Jungle Strike, Skitchin' and the rest of the batch of impending releases are going to have been well worth the wait.

It is a long time now since PGA Tour reared its head on the Amiga, and ever since, thousands of people have been gagging for another instalment in what is undoubtedly the best golf series around. Versions have come and gone for the PC, Mega Drive and Macintosh, without even a glimmer of hope for us lot. Well, now the wait is over, and if you ask me, this wins hands down in all departments over its predecessor.

Simulating the European version of the tour, all your favourite continental golfsters are there, including the legendary Seve Ballesteros and of course, the commentator's dream, Jose-Maria Olazabal. You can either compete against the pros or a friend on five of the most demanding and popular courses around Europe.

The control system has been totally overhauled for this incarnation and, on the whole, works exceptionally well. Now, instead of clicking on the little word in the bottom right of the screen to start your swing, the game has an interactive cursor, point 'n' click adventure game style.

This means that when you move the mouse around various areas of the screen, the cursor will automatically change into something relevant. When you want to swing, simply move the cursor anywhere in the vicinity of the golfer and you will see the arrow change into a swing indicator. This new control method also affects club selection, stance, the draw and fade option and putting distance, and is on the whole, an improvement.

The game suffers possibly in only one way, and that's difficulty. I found the first game to be a little tricky, especially the putting, but European Tour is a different story entirely. Within a couple of holes I was hitting pars regularly and birdies all too often, and after a couple of months, the challenge will probably have all but disappeared. But, seeing as we've only had it for a week or so, I can't really say for definite whether that's true or not.

At the moment I can't really find much else to fault the game. If you're a golf fan, you've probably been starved of a decent simulation of your favourite sport, and have no doubt been consoling yourself with the original EA effort of a few years ago. Thankfully, Ocean have now stopped the drought by supplying the presently flourishing Amiga games market with a conversion straight out of the top drawer.

If you're desperately seeking a golf game that's got all the features you could hope for, I can't see why you would want to look anywhere else. This is definitely the leader in its class by quite some considerable distance. A

I don't really know what it is about golf games that appeals to me so much. Perhaps it's their relaxed nature or the ease of gameplay. Whatever it is, the Amiga version of PGA European Tour has got it in bucketfuls. Featuring crisper, more colourful and all-round better graphics than the Mega Drive version, Ocean have come up with a new clear leader in the field. If you only buy one golf game this year, and let's be honest the chances are you probably will, then this should definitely be it. On the other hand, if you hate golf, and golf games, then it probably isn't a good idea to buy this.

Bubble Gun

I don't know about you, but I'm scared of crocodiles. They're all big and stuff

Hmm. It's nineteen years into the future, and crocodiles rule the earth. In their new found position at the top of the food chain, they can enjoy all the luxuries that for millennia they were denied. Can't think off-hand what these particular luxuries might be, but no doubt crocodiles, like the rest of us, secretly aspire to a higher standard of living. Of course they do. Unfortunately the crocs are scared witless of bubble gum. But then they wouldn't they? Hmm. In these futuristic times of crocodile-ruling

What on earth is going on here? Is the croc escaping from the circus?

(which it will, often – you only get a couple of gum pellets) and you're forced to lose energy points by hitting an enemy because he's too big to jump over. Later on, the levels become brighter and more complex, but the principles remain the same. You'd be hard pressed not to become fed up before you got half way through. A

This dungeon is where all the "action" starts. Fire your trusty Bubble gun and the leprechaun geezers will be no more

The doors of the natives' huts remain firmly shut as the croc creature approaches. It's not very scary though, is it?

Oh wow! This is obviously some sort of chess-type scenario thang bubble gum hysteria, bubble guns are the revered weapon, spitting out gobbets of the filthy stuff and forcing the lizard-like creatures out of action. Or so it says here...

Something of a crocster yourself, you have become trapped in a multi-level mazelet of sorts, and need to use your skill, cunning and bubble gun to avoid obstacles, find keys and dispose of nasty creatures in order to find a way out.

Throughout each of the four small levels are a number of chests, each one featuring a different coloured lock. To open the chests, all three pieces of the correctly coloured key need to be located. All but one bear goodies in the shape of points, extra time and that kind of thing, with one chest itself being the "key" to the level, opening the door to the next stage.

This bubble gun though. I can't for the life of me work out any point to it whatsoever. We're told that the new superbreed of crocs are susceptible to the deadly gum it fires, but this is completely irrelevant, since it is the crocodile who fires the thing at a number of very much uncroc-like beasts. And even when you do shoot them, that platform staple of a swift head jump is needed to finish them off, a jump which surely would have sufficed without the hassle of the gun.

Early on, the game looks drab. The character is okay – not great – and the animation is nice, but I've never been a fan of the kind of limited jumps that this game allows you to perform.

This feature is at its worst when your ammo runs out

The point with this game, the reason it's called Bubble Gun, is because such a piece of apparatus is the focal point throughout. But it isn't. The bubble gun is an irrelevant addition that plays no significant part, and doesn't need to be here. The gun aside, the rest of the game is at best, alright. An attraction of the platform game is constantly wondering what lies ahead, how it will differ from the levels you have already completed, and the answer here is not too much. Bubble Gun is outshone in every department by Charlie J. Cool, a game that itself, is far from inspiring.

It's hardly Ruff 'n' Tumble is it? Bubble Gun is the gaming equivalent of one of those films which come out straight on to video without ever seeing the inside of a cinema. I didn't like it, wouldn't play it and cringe at the thought of spending money on it.

It's a good while since we first saw this, and we even had it on a coverdisk a month or two back. If you played that demo you may be surprised to read that the game has not changed at all since then.

It's entirely possible that you're reading this in some cosy, southern hamlet and have never actually stood on an open terrace on a Sunday afternoon to watch a game [steady - Ed!]. I have. Every week I slog it round to some dodgy northern town and pay my six quid with relish. So, I quite fancied having a dabble at the management side of things myself.

Now, a couple of seasons ago, the Rugby League was redesigned from three divisions into two. This doesn't seem to have been noticed by the programmers, so three leagues is what you'll get. This isn't really a major problem, but imagine having a footy management game with six divisions. It simply wouldn't happen would it?

On top of this, the player names are all fictitious, although to be fair, this is stated clearly on the box. The manual looks cheap and nasty too. It's small things like this that collectively add together to let Rugby League Coach down. The game looks a couple of years out of date, and the interface system is identical to Audiogenic's Superleague Manager, which is about 230 years old.

Watch the clock

Matches are played out using the "watch the clock and wait to be told of the score" system, like Championship Manager. Now there's absolutely nothing wrong with that, but when I won my first match 1-0, I began to wonder how realistic the whole thing was. Where were the 34-30 thrillers? 1-0? 1-0? Hmm.

Anyway, I carried on blundering my way through the dubious team selection system, getting increasingly annoyed by having to answer letters from the mindless sheep that chose to follow my club, and persistently losing games I should have won. Anyone who knows anything about Rugby League will probably think this all sounds fairly realistic, but trust me, it isn't.

There's not much else you can say. There aren't any other RL management games that I'm aware of, so if you're dedicated enough, this will be for you. However, if you're looking for entertainment, it's probably worth even the most diehard League fanatic biting the bullet and getting a football management game instead. Sorry Audiogenic, I really wanted to like this more.

Rugby League Coach really didn't keep me at it for too long. Despite being a regular attendee at "the real thing", and hoping that this would be half decent, it didn't manage to captivate me in the slightest. The presentation is pretty second rate by comparison to some other similar games, and the information is well out of date. A new interface would have been nice too, rather than that awful Superleague Manager outstretched arm thing which doesn't do anything for the game at all. Come on, Wembley Rugby League was a good effort. This, in my opinion of course, isn't.

SECOND OPINION

It's not very good this is it? Audiogenic have done themselves no favours whatsoever here, especially when you consider the quality of their two latest releases. Both Wembley International Soccer and Bubble & Squeak are leaders in their field, this is just a sorry product.

Awalk into any computer store these days can sometimes lead to wishful glances over at the PC section, and any wargames fans might have noticed Fields of Glory for this particular machine. If this is the case they will also know that it is probably one of the best looking wargames to date, and here it is for the Amiga.

Even though this type of game is generally associated with bland graphics, great leaps have been made in recent years to make them look more appealing in order to attract a wider audience. MicroProse are the company to thank as they bring the glory of muskets, cannons and dysentery to the Amiga.

Anybody who plays wargames a lot (that's the real ones and not their computer cousins) will know a lot about miniatures. The programmers of this particular title have tried to make the men look as much like these miniatures as possible, and the system works really well. As far as the visuals are concerned, Fields of Glory isn't a million miles away from the PC version.

There are a number of training missions and difficulty options in order to make learning the game as simple a task as possible. The manual (as with all MicroProse instructions) is clear and concise, and helps you through all aspects of governing your little body of men.

Troop manoeuvres are the key to the game and there are several ways of moving them into position. If you believe the time is right, you can even set them to charge the enemy and then sit back and wait to see who gets routed. Of course one wrong decision could mean disaster, as it only takes one cannon shot to wipe out your best guys. Several great historic battles are included and you can fiddle around changing factors to your heart's content.

If you're into the Napoleonic period, or just want to try something a little bit different, then Fields of Glory is a good place to stick your money. It's probably the most complete, appealing wargame to date. With all due credit to companies like Impressions, who consistently turn out good games of this genre, Fields of Glory is, in my opinion, considerably better. If you had to point at one particular strategy game of this type and say that it was the one to attract non-wargamers, it would have to be Fields of Glory. A

The battle can be selected from the menu. There are plenty of variations and these can be tweaked

A good wargame that a lot of people will have been waiting for. The PC version impressed a lot of people and the only thing missing from this Amiga conversion is the database facility of the original. With realistic characters, nice sound effects, ease of play and a comprehensive manual too, MicroProse have surely got themselves another winner. If you're a dedicated wargame hater then that's the way it will always be – just you stick to your platformers and shoot'em-ups – but this could help to convert a few fence-sitters to the cause. Fields of Glory deserves all the praise it gets.

SECOND OPINION

My God this is bland. It's good, but oh my lord is it bland. This is so bland you could say it was an all-out bland fest and you couldn't be accused of exaggerating. It's a fine war game though, and one of the best I have come across in a very long time.

BEAT 'EM UP

Ris Ro

Ooh! My word! Rise of the Robots. Look who's got the exclusive too! That's right, your favourite Amiga mag has been given the privilege of having first crack

Imagine an excited conversation something along the lines of the following enthusiastic dialogue:

Chicken: Where am I off today?

Somebody not as important: Mirage in Cheshire. They've got the Amiga versions of Rise of the Robots for us to have first look at.

Chicken: Not the Rise of the Robots surely? The same one that everybody said would never come out? The one that's been in development for over two years?

Somebody not as important: That's the one.

Chicken: (faints).

Yes folks. That was me a couple of weeks ago when we were first told that Rise of the Robots was ready, and on the Amiga too. So, off I trekked to Congleton on the coldest day of the year so far, to be the first to review the Amiga version. There's no point in being dishonest, as the months have gone by since news of ROTR first filtered through, I've been getting more and more sceptical as to how good it would actually be. We'd all seen the screenshots featuring gorgeous rendered robots, but surely they would be reserved for owners of Pentium class PCs, while Amiga owners would be reduced to playing a version of the game featuring two stick men on a blue background.

I've been doing this sort of thing long enough to have become (maybe too) cynical about such flash-in-the-pan releases, but all along Mirage have stuck to their guns.

Your cyborg squares up for some metallic mayhem

The Crusher is one of the most feared opponents you can come across in battle

e of the bots

Ex-Bitmap Sean Griffiths has beavered away silently over many hard nights, along with hordes of others, to make this dream in particular become a reality.

Anyway, back to the story. I was first shown the PC version and allowed to give it a go. Guess what? It looked exactly as I expected it to. I mean, it was a Super VGA CD-Rom version after all.

"Let's have a look at the Amiga version now", said Sean. I gulped. Did I really want to see this effort which would make Streetfighter II for the Amiga look like the SNES version? Then it happened. The A1200 booted up, my jaw hit the floor and a smile appeared on my face. My views on ROTR changed almost instantly from, "It could be awful", to, "I always knew it would be wonderful (smug)."

Metal Mickey

Amazingly, apart from fewer background colours, everything is the same as the PC version. Don't ask me how they've done it. I dread to think about the amount of hours that have gone into putting this together. But the same it is. The rendering is here, the speed is here and it's virtually the same control method. That's enough comparisons for this review, because the Amiga version deserves the rest of the space.

Everyone knows this is an out-and-out beat'em-up, so I won't bore you with all that. It does have a plot which is worth mentioning, and revolves around a big

The spacecraft comes in to land

The introduction is quite spectacular on all formats android-making factory, far into the future. One of the beasts has got a virus and has spread it to the rest of these highly-intelligent cyborgs. The company has to do something, so it sends in a cyborg of its own to sort 'em all out.

You start on the lowest level and have to work your way up, battering all that get in your way. This is of course the one-player option. The two-player game just sees you trying to leather each other to within an inch of your lives.

Okay, so it looks good and has a nice story, but so does Dragon's Lair. This was another thing that initially worried me with Rise. It takes a clever

The factory is a big sprawling building with many surprises

programmer to code a beat'em-up that actually works and plays well. It sounds like the easiest job in the world to take a tried and tested genre and simply change the sprites into gleaming robots, but I've seen plenty of others (especially on the poor old Amiga) fall by the wayside for being nothing short of trash.

If I don't behave myself I'll have grey hairs before I'm 25. Once again, there was absolutely no reason for my worrying. I'm not too proud to say I was totally wrong. I'm only too glad to say it in fact. Rise of the Robots plays really well, far better than I would have imagined. And, with graphics like these, it's surprising that gameplay hasn't been forsaken in any way.

Stringbean

The control works in a way that allows you to score as many hits as you like, but you actually have to plan things and think ahead. If you hold down the fire button, a power gauge steadily rises, and your hit is much more damaging. So, do you go for a large number of taps, or wind up for a couple of really big shots? Of course, while you're sitting back with your finger on the firebutton, there's every chance your enemy will start to pull your head off (metaphorically speaking of course, it's not Mortal Kombat you know). It all happens over the best of three rounds, just like everything else, but it's just so polished that it's almost unbelievable.

The fights are separated by a number of cinematic sections that announce the arrival of a new robot into the arena, or show your character as it makes its way through the factory. This keeps you up to date with what's going on and where you are, and it also allows the machine to load in the next memory intensive section while you wait.

The cyborg is confronted by another of the building's metallic inhabitants

I've gone on about the graphics already, and I'm going to talk about the music in more detail elsewhere, but it's also worth mentioning the nice clanking, whirring and fizzing sounds that occur as the metallic monsters move about and take hits. Everything sounds just right, so not only does it look and play like a dream, it sounds like one too (if you can have anything sounding like a dream, which you probably can't, but that's one for somebody to edit out if they're not happy with my English!).

Well, that appears to be that. For ages now you'll have been wondering whether it would be any good, and I can assure you that it is. There's going to be a hole in the lives of those guys at Mirage once this is finally out in the shops (November 18 is the date for your diaries by the way), because it's been a part of them for so long.

Be warned, it's gonna set you back £42.99 on A1200 and CD32, which is pretty pricey. But, if you think of all the hours of work that have been put into making this turn out the way it has, then there's some justification. Well, I don't have to pay to play it, but I'll leave you safe in the knowledge that this is the best beat'em-up for the Amiga, and it might just be worth writing your list to Santa right now! A

Brian Cant provides the music...

Did I say Cant? I meant to say May. Yes, Brian May has recorded the musical score for Rise of the Robots. Using two tracks off his new album, the former Queen star turned Rock Legend has transformed Rise with some of that guitar stuff like off the Ford advert. However, Brian Cant, the former star of Playaway turned Old Nobody, denied that he had anything to do with the game. The use of Brian May further proves that Mirage have really gone the whole hog with this one.

Rise of the Robots is nothing short of stunning. The project is technically brilliant. The Amiga is stretched so far that it almost creaks. The CD32 and A1200 versions are identical (except the disk is shinier on the CD32), and other versions will just have less colours. Control, graphics, sound and playability are all excellent. As I said before, anything over £35 is expensive for a game in my book, but if ever anything is worth that sort of money, it has got to be this. A memorable moment in the Amiga's history... and you can quote me on that one! Yes siree!

This isn't possible. An Amiga game cannot look this good. I refuse to believe it. Someone from Mirage must have come in one night and cunningly swapped all the Amigas for PCs without anyone noticing. And what about those Apostles eh? Who are they trying to kid?

Club Football The Manager

Not another football management game, surely? Afraid so readers

There has to come a time eventually when football management games can get no more comprehensive, and everything that can be included, has been. The new Sensible World of Soccer looks like it could be the ultimate business, but until then, we're going to have to endure a spate of other similar releases.

I say "endure" because I'm really not too impressed with Club Football - The Manager. Apparently, there are plans to use the Club Football title with other games in the future, but for now, Boms have stuck with management. It's been in development for almost twelve months now, but all that time doesn't seem to have produced what can be regarded as a properly finished article.

I'm not knocking the presentation, because that, in its own way, ranks alongside the classy Premier Manager 2. But, the information in the database is horribly out of date. For example, Samways is still at Spurs, whilst Klinsmann isn't, and Alan Kernaghan is still at Middlesbrough, even though Man. City played millions for him about 15 months ago before eventually farming him out to Bolton Wanderers!

Bizarre

When this game is competing directly against the likes of the Championship Manager '94 End of Season update, and more indirectly against Krisalis' new Man Utd data disk (accurate to within seven days of release), it seems bizarre that the developers don't seem to have paid too much attention to the accuracy of the statistics.

Of course, not everybody is that interested in accurate details, but you have to seriously question the quality of a game which is shoddy in this respect. I mean, if so little effort was put into this side of the game, what are the other features going to be like? Surely some of the last six months should have been spent updating the data?

If the player database was the only problem, it wouldn't be too bad. However, the in-game animations add nothing to the overall package and should be turned off immediately. It's impossible to tell which side is which half the time, and the instructions do not cover all the options in enough detail.

If you turn it into a text only game, by switching off the match sequences, you might get something out of it. But, if you're the kind of fanatic who's already played Premier Manager and Championship Manager to death, I think you'll find that Club Football - The Manager doesn't come up to scratch. It isn't even in the same league, never mind the same division.

Maybe I'm just hard to please, but one or two other members of the AA team also gave it a go, and they didn't think it was much cop either. If you're absolutely gagging for a new management game to tide you over, then this is there waiting for you. But seriously, you'd be far better off saving up for Premier Manager 3 or the new arcade-cum-management sim, Sensible World of Soccer. They should both be out before Christmas, so you won't have too long to wait. A

It's Premier Manager 3 isn't it! Ooops, oh no it isn't! Oh yes it is! Oh no it isn't etc...

This is partly how the match action is presented, except this bit doesn't really move at all!

It's a real shame that something better hasn't been made out of this. It's been in development long enough, and I am disappointed with the final result which I believe doesn't deliver its initial promise. There are no problems with the menus or presentation in general - even the box looks the part - but the management bit itself isn't up to the standard we've been used to of late. Look elsewhere in this issue for news of Premier Manager 3 which looks like it will retain the management title this time next month. You have been warned. Get a demo first!

ROLE PLAYING

The map comes in handy for finding your way around. Obviously

Ahem, er, this isn't the options, oh no. It's an action packed grab this is

Robinsons F

Sounds more like a hymn for the bloke who was Man Friday's best mate, but it is in fact the latest offering from Daze

Survival. Now there's a topic that's never really been explored in a computer game. OK, in virtually every game you have ever played your main goal will have been to stay alive until you reach the end, but Robinson's Requiem confronts survival from an entirely different perspective.

Imagine being dumped on some bleak deserted moor in the middle of nowhere, with no food, water or method of defending yourself against any hostile force you may come across.

That is exactly the sort of scenario which is set by this latest offering from Daze's collaboration with top French developers, Silmarils.

Set many light years in the future, Robinson's Requiem is apparently the ultimate test of human endurance in an alien world. You play a government agent called Robinson and have been sent on a reconnaissance assignment to a mysterious, unknown planet. Before long, however, you discover that the entire mission is a trap set by your own government, who for their own reasons, no longer want you around. Suspicious eh?

As we join the action, your ship is out of control and the planet you thought you were going to investigate is in fact an enormous prison – an astral Alcatraz from which no one has ever escaped. Well, escaped alive, that is.

At the start of the game you have bailed out of your soon-to-be-destroyed ship in favour of the forbidding heart of a hostile jungle. You are equipped only with a survival kit, including many medicines and tools, and a micro computer secured to your chest to keep you informed of your physiological condition.

The ultimate aim of the game is to escape, but the overriding priority is that of survival. Once you have grasped the basic techniques, things will become much easier in your bid to escape the planet. At times, after a battle, or when you have contracted some form of illness (from food poisoning to malaria), you will need to treat yourself correctly or die. This means anything from X-raying yourself to looking for broken bones, or administering drugs to lessen the effects of flu.

Staying Alive

You may be wondering how you'll know when you are ill. Well, one of the best features of the game has to be the soundtrack, which must be one of the most detailed yet. Every little cough, sneeze and hiccup is played out alongside the musical score, and in conjunction with your personal computer and some practise, you will be able to assess your condition and treat yourself like a qualified GP.

In extreme cases it is even necessary to amputate one of your own limbs to stop the spread of gangrene, and yes, you have to perform the operation yourself using items from your medical kit. Obviously you want to avoid this, not only because of the thought of it, but also because it will significantly hamper your progress in making good your escape.

It's nice to see a friendly face. Guess who got out of the wrong side of his bed this morning

The landscape is full of trees!
(Nice caption there mate)

Somewhere in that murky mess is the cave entrance

Requiem

There is far more to Robinson's Requiem than just looking after your health. You will need to fight, make friends, investigate and explore every nook and cranny of the vast prison to find out everything that you need to know. It is amazing that so many features have been crammed into this game, and unfortunately, it is possibly this good point that brings about the game's downfall.

Saturday Night Fever

Up to now it has all sounded pretty good, wouldn't you agree? Unfortunately, what you can't tell from still screenshots and words is that the game is so slow. I played the A1200 version, and although you can change the settings slightly to speed the game up (lessening the graphical detail and window size), it just isn't enough. On the minimum setting the game becomes very hard on the eyes, and at times it is quite hard to work out what's going on. On the highest setting everything looks good, but try and move and you end up waiting for about one second before each step is made. It might not sound like much, but when it can become a real grind.

Full marks must go to Silmarils for originality. I have never encountered anything quite like this before, and the game scores itself a lot of brownie points simply because of that. But, in putting so much in to it and making the game so detailed and intense, they appear to have shot themselves in the foot.

We have a real catch 22 situation here. Leave out the features and the game loses a lot of its appeal, leave them in and it becomes a chore to play. I don't know how this performs on a higher end Amiga or an accelerated A1200, but I should imagine that they will make the game more than bearable. However, I'm not sure that the market for games on those machines is enormous. A

Daze can expect significantly more success with the PC version of this than they can with its Amiga equivalent. What is undoubtedly a great strategy game has been seriously hampered by the sluggish manner in which the game plays. If you have a higher end Amiga then I would have absolutely no hesitation in recommending this as an essential purchase. For those with a standard A1200, I would have to say that you should think long and hard about whether you like your games played at what almost equates to a snail's pace. Personally I don't care for it, but maybe you will.

PLATFORM

Looks like I'm about to die in a pit of boiling, roiling lava

It isn't the jumping that's the problem - it's where I might land. Top cactus fun

I've heard a few contrived computer game stories in my time, but by the left, this one takes the biscuit. I could go into detail and make you vomit with laughter at the shamefulfulness of it all, but I won't. Programmers Nevada have realised the futility of claiming any credibility, and in their manual take the mickey out of themselves. And that's alright by us, since self-deprecation is a favourite pastime here in the AA office. Bonus points to begin with, that's what I say.

All you need to know is that Charlie J. Cool ("Cool by name and cool by nature") is dead. However, he isn't at rest, and won't be until he negotiates the seven lands of Midway. This voyage of discovery will decide whether his soul resides for eternity in heaven or hell.

Seven lands, 28 levels - it's a biggish platformer - and it's got me almost completely torn in two as to whether the game itself is, ahem, heavenly or hellish.

In the God corner

There's more to the game than simply running end to end. It is claimed that loads of bonus levels are scattered throughout (I did find a few), and must be located by collecting eye symbols from the level. This eliminates some of the guesswork, although you can still stumble across an opening merely by chance. Basically, it means you're sure to see most of the game.

Charlie J C

At last, a platform game where the annoying little character actually does get killed. Hurrah for Charlie J. Cool!

As well as the obligatory extra lives, icons to collect include speed shoes, super jumps and a compass which points you in the direction of the key - necessary to complete the level. A number of keys can be used, in lieu of the options screen,

The game itself looks very nice, but hidden within these levels are one or two very difficult and unfair jumps. Very frustrating. Still, you can always vent your anger on innocent caterpillars for switching on effects, music and the auto-jump. Okay, so I'll admit that this isn't a vital element of the gameplay, but it's a nice option to have. More interesting features include the "reverse screen" and the black and white modes, usually activated by accident.

The levels are large at the outset, there's a decent learning curve and the background parallax is very nice indeed. Oh, and the inclusion of two separate endings is a very good idea (the more genuine bad guys you kill, as opposed to the more colourful pseudo-baddies, the greater your chances of arriving in heaven).

In the corner of Beelzebub

The sound is like something you'd have expected to come across in a game for the Atari VCS ten years ago, and we really shouldn't have to settle for simple blips and bloops in these times of technological greatness. Charlie is an aural disappointment from start to finish.

The baddies are also a bit poor. In the main they're small, and there's very little action required to avoid them. So, an end-of-level guardian would have come in handy to break up the fairly simple and repetitive gameplay. Fair enough, the sub-games are in there... scratch that one. But, deduct a point for Charlie J.'s habit of disappearing from the top of the screen when he leaps from a high point. Very untidy.

Impassajumps. We've seen them before and it isn't fair. You're standing towards the left of the screen and most of what you can see to the right is empty space. But, there's nowhere else to go. You leap. You hold your breath. You swear, because you've vanished down a hole and lost a life, and it isn't your fault.

Which brings up another Point of Satan. While it may well be your fault if your ineptitude finds you, say, stuck between two walls, or rocks or whatever, it isn't asking too much to expect that you should be able to escape. Sometimes however, you can't.

It isn't that I was unable to find a way out, it's just that in certain places, there isn't one. The manual even addresses this point and draws your attention to the escape key. This should be pressed in such a situation to enable you to lose a life, which must be done in order to move on. That's unforgivable. It's lazy, and it's a shame.

Oh well, I've waffled on long enough now, so it's time to decide where Charlie J. Cool's going to be eating his tea tonight – the table of the Lord or the demon's pit. A

Charlie J. Cool frustrates me. I enjoyed it for the most part – it's a fun little game and perfectly playable, but it's untidy. Why go to the trouble of producing 28 good looking, enjoyable levels, and then ignoring the disappearing sprite? One blind jump is fine, but there are far too many here, as are there places to become impossibly stuck – a surefire guaranteed way of hacking off the money-forking gamers. Despite this, I enjoyed playing it and was strangely drawn to its overall cheesiness. But, as for the question of where it lies on the eternal plane, the answer, I think, is firmly in Limbo.

SECOND OPINION

A Mario rip off from start to finish, and a reasonable one at that. In some ways, Charlie J. Cool reminds me of McDonaldsland. Not too sure I could have played it for more than 15 minutes without becoming frustrated though. I'm Johnny patient me.

Cannon Fodder

The first thing you should do after unpacking your newly bought copy of Cannon Fodder from its beautiful shiny polythene and plastic case, is remove your control pad from the CD32 and replace it with a mouse. Assuming of course that you own one. If not – tough.

Through no fault of Sensible Software's (they've substituted the red and blue buttons for the left and right mouse ones), to play this game using the CD32's ridiculously rickety method of control is to lose that instinctive and panicky feel that only a darting mouse can provide, especially since instincts and panic are the two main ingredients of Cannon Fodder.

The game remains the same, although I'm certain that a couple of hitherto unheard sound effects have crept in along the way, or perhaps the jungle fever has sent me mad, who knows? It's still the same mad dash around the screen, blowing up anything that moves, avoiding things which are too difficult to destroy, shouting, swearing and generally being delighted that a game should be this much fun to play.

The impressive intro sequence that you may have heard about is only available to those whose machines are fitted with FMV, and the screenshots look great. Unfortunately we can't find a shop that sells the device, so I can't tell you for sure first-hand.

Anyway, here's the deal. If you've got a CD32, go and buy Cannon Fodder. And rejoice if you own a mouse, it's great. A

Manchester United Premier League Champions

The way the season has started, it's looking like Krisalis may well have to tie up a certain Geordie team as League Champions in a couple of months. But, until that day comes, United it is, and Giggs, Cantona, Hughes, May (um?) and company have been transferred to CD!

In case you missed it all first time around, you take over as boss of any team (maybe even Manchester United themselves), choose the players and formation, then go out and play the game itself. The match action is far better than most, and this hasn't been fiddled with at all for the new version.

What you do get is the addition of tons of high quality photographs. This may not seem like much, but they don't pop up in any random order. If United are, for example, playing Arsenal at Highbury, then before the match starts, there'll be an action shot of United v Arsenal at the famous North London stadium. If your next match is at Old Trafford, then that's where the photo will be. The game's as good as ever, and the photos add to it no end. If you have the original then... well, I'll leave it to you. A

Universe

The first impression I had when the packaging was ripped off the chunky looking parcel with the Derby postmark, was that I'd got my money's worth. Not that I paid for it, but the double CD box containing not only the disk and manual, but also the Guide To Paralela – the galaxy in which the story is set – is enough to make a CD32 owner's eyes glint with glee.

The game, as with so many on this vastly under-utilised format, remains the same. It's the graphically-excellent-but-slightly-frustrating-to-play-festival the disk version was, the only difference being the much-maligned CD32 controller. The character, Boris, is moved directly by means of the joypad, and the red and blue buttons are used to select and implement any options you see fit to use.

Unfortunately, once again, the controller makes a game more difficult to play than it should be. This small inconvenience can usually be glossed over, because the vast majority of people own a mouse, but ridiculously, in this case, using the mouse is not an option – and I can't for the life of me think why.

Universe remains a very good game trapped in a dodgy control method, and unfortunately, the lack of a mouse option for this version, makes it that bit dodgier for anyone but the ultra patient. And to be honest, it pales in comparison to the superb speaking CD version of Simon the Sorcerer. That's what this machine should be used for. A

Dark Seed

HR Giger is a bit of a strange chap. Having designed a veritable portfolio-full of wonderful, but slightly perverse artwork, Cyberdreams signed him up for their Darkseed game. All that was a couple of years ago, but the emergence of CD32 technology has provided an opportunity to release this atmospheric adventure on another format, this time with full speech.

The fact that most words are spoken puts it in the same league as the impressive Simon the Sorcerer CD, and the American voice that narrates the adventure, thankfully doesn't get annoying. However, we couldn't get a mouse to work, and the system with the control pad isn't the best in the world, thus proving that speech isn't everything.

It may be that you CD32 owners are desperate to get your hands on another CD adventure this month, and if that's the case, I'd recommend this over

Universe. It's a good solid adventure with excellent graphics that aren't as colourful as Simon, but then they aren't supposed to be. I don't know, there are a few niggles, but I'd still probably play it if I had some spare time on my hands. It was woefully overmarked in my opinion first time around, although that was a few years back. Anyway, what the hell. A Part 2 The final part of our exclusive Dreamweb feature comes with more disturbing thoughts from a madman's mind, and a proper intro!

Friday April 6
12.15pm

Stayed awake.
Haven't read library books.
Eden rang. Told her to leave it for a few days.
No Murders.
Must sleep.
Something's happening to the electricity.
Death knocked on my door but I wouldn't let him in. I'm no fool.

Saturday April 7

Slept till mid-day. Dreams getting worse.
Coming nearer. No reports on the Dealer. Went to St Septimus – didn't go in.
Eden didn't call.
The lights are turning on and off on their own.
I prayed to Angel before I went to bed. She sang me to sleep with an Ave Maria.
Deliver us from evil.
ON OFF. ON OFF. ON OFF.

Sunday April 8

Dreams still bad. Not sure I woke up. I watched the light-switch for two hours. It didn't say a word. Spiders everywhere. The Dealer killed a woman today.

Monday April 9

The clock keeps going round. It won't tell me the time. Santa Claus gave a gun to me. Let loose the puppies for me.
I died last night.

Tuesday April 10

Today was not a good day.

Wednesday April 11

My name is Ryan, and I'm afraid I'm losing my mind. I'm sitting here, by my table, in my flat, writing very slowly. Very carefully. Yesterday I took a step that either drove me insane or saved my sanity. I'm not sure which. Yesterday I accepted that the impossible might be true. That Santa Claus might be real. No. That's not it. Concentrate Ryan.

Concentrate.
I've read the books. I think it's evening now. Yes – it's evening. God, there are spiders all over my flat, living room, kitchen, bathroom. Oh what tangled webs they weave...

Can't concentrate. Don't think I've eaten any stuff over the last week – must have been miles out of my head. Haven't left the flat for a week I don't think. Hard to say.

I'll tell you the truth, if I can keep my thoughts still. They're rowdy little boys running about in a playground. I haven't told you my secrets, not since I bought this journal. If you're reading this you'll know what I've done to the cover. I cut a title on to the leather binding. It took me a long time, because I used my fingernails to cut out the words. My nails bled a lot and that's why there are stains in the leather. Blood and skin. I cut out the title DIARY OF A MADMAN. Then I thought, about an hour ago, what if I'm not mad? What if the dreams are true? So I dug my nails in again, and sliced brackets around MAD then carved a question mark. My nails are a bit of a mess. So that's the story of the title. Now I'll tell you the story of the story. God didn't speak to me. Santa Claus, Blood on his beard. No, I'm losing it again. Must get out of the flat. Eat. I'll tell you later. Yes go out. Go to church.

Church.

I'm sane, for the moment. As sane as I get that is. These bouts of sanity don't last long. So I'll write fast while I still have my marbles.

I went out three, maybe four hours ago. I must have eaten – my stomach feels full. Enough of that. I went to the church to St Septimus. While I was climbing the Italian steps I heard following footsteps, didn't take any notice at first, no reason to. Then I stumbled over a step. The footfalls stopped. I looked back into the dark. The dark was too dark, it hid whoever was there. I carried on. The tracking footsteps started again. I stopped.

They followed. Just like in the movies.

Imagination you say? The imagination of a madman? I don't think so. You weren't there. You don't know what happened next.

The door of St Septimus was open, wide open. At first I thought there was a late service, but I discovered the lights were off when I slipped inside. There were plenty of candles, congregated on the altar, in shrines at the feet of statues. Not a soul in sight and all those lighted candles. What church leaves its doors wide open at night with the lights off and the candles burning? Make sense to you? I know I wasn't mad at that moment. I'm sure I wasn't.

When you're inside a church, you walk quietly, don't you? I moved softly all the way down the nave, eyes fixed on the altar. Then I heard muffled steps behind me.

I spun round at that instant, the back of the church went dark in a sputter of dozens of candles. There were two candle-racks at the rear of the church, one each side of the door, some twenty feet apart. And the candles went out at the same moment.

Whoever was back there had quenched the flames simultaneously. Then I thought, there must be two people back there. Although two individuals acting in such synchronicity, extinguishing at least twenty flames each, and all in a microsecond, was as wild a notion as a single man with twenty-foot-span arms.

I waited there, near the altar rails, for someone to move, speak, even breathe. Nothing. The waiting game got too much for my jangled nerves.

'Anyone there?' I called out.

Answer came there none, as the poet would say. But there was a powerful sense of what shall I call it, bad presence. Yes, a bad presence in the dark at the back of the church. I admit I was scared. Maybe you think you wouldn't have been, but you weren't there (and I'm glad).

I hesitated, not knowing whether to advance or retreat. Then the blindingly obvious struck me. If I hadn't been enfeebled by my week in Limbo I would have realised earlier there were scores of candles in the rest of the church. More than enough to enlighten the blackness around the door. As they put it in the very worst of novels – some blasphemous tenebrous miasma lay upon the benighted air. Let's just say the back of the church was black as sin.

That's when I tasted raw dread on my tongue. Fear can make you act like a hero as easily as a coward. The spur of terror drove me to attack, not retreat. Another flip of the coin and I'd have run in the opposite direction just as fast. I raced at the coagulated blackness, shouting my head off. I've no idea what I shouted, some token defiance, I suppose.

The darkness split in two the instant I plunged into it. I glimpsed a fleeing something or other to the right, darkening the side of the nave.

And I saw, much more clearly, a man streak out of the arched doorway. By the time I was out in the open, he was gone. But his after-image stuck in my brain. As I caught my breath, I settled on that image and the smell that accompanied it. In the dark behind my eyes, I saw the man's face pale and vivid and the smell – the unmistakable, coppery scent of blood.

Yes my mind's clear now. I can sense the clarity of it as I write. I hope my sanity remains long enough for me to tell you all I know.

I saw his face, and smelt the blood, yes. But there was one more detail. His suit, as far as I could discern, was dark and unremarkable, but there was something sticking from an oversized breast-pocket. A playing card, I couldn't be certain, but I'd lay long odds that it was the Queen of hearts. The huge breast-pocket bulged fit to burst. I didn't take much note of that at the time.

Not until I got back home and switched on the TV.

The news came on ten minutes later. The first report was of the Dealer. He'd claimed another victim. A middle-aged woman, Lisa Carrack, mother of three, her heart cut out, and another heart, the previous victim's, pushed into the cavity, along with a card, The Queen of Spades. The woman was black. The Dealer's special brand of humour. Site of the murder, The Halian Steps district.

That's when I remembered the big, big breast pocket. Big enough for the roomiest of hearts. As for the card...

The Queen of Hearts was for his next victim. A woman who deals in love, perhaps? Angel?

No – could be any number of women. I waited almost an hour, then a fresh report came in. Another victim, on the city's east side, Julia Rivelio, her heart replaced by Lisa Carrack's with the Queen of Hearts as the Dealer's calling card. Mixed with the revulsion and sympathy was a small dash of relief, relief that I wasn't the Dealer.

With my mounting insanity, my blackouts, my lost days, I'd begun to fear that a Mr Hyde had been loosed in me. Didn't you wonder that, if only for a moment? But I had another cause for relief. The voices in my dreams had been validated. They'd told me to kill this bastard. Oh yeah, I'd seen him before, in dreams, in terrible dreams. Sometimes I killed him. Sometimes he killed me. But whenever we met, in dreams there was death. Well, Dealer, I'll show you a new pack of cards, The Tarot pack. The trump card is Death. And Death's also the name of the game. There's coincidence and coincidence, and tonight's streak of dark flukes was too much to put down to happenstance. Something had guided me to St Septimus. I know that psychotic murderers hear voices in their heads, commands from their dreams, ordering them to kill for God or the Devil. That's what's terrified me these past few weeks.

But this was different. This was like being asked to kill Hitler.

God, I'm tired. I need to get my strength back.

Tonight, I won't be afraid to sleep.

Tomorrow, where shall I start out on the hunt? St Septimus?

Yes, St Septimus.

Thursday April 12 11.05pm

Eleven 'o clock and all's not well. I've just read what I wrote last night. What confident words! Today, I'm not so sure, although I've managed to keep my grip on reality. I went to St Septimus, but I was haunted by a number, every step I took. The number seven. No, I'm not superstitious. It's something from the dream. The killing dream. I think I'm being asked to kill- execute more than the Dealer.

Those library books when I finally read them, stirred up some sludge in my mind, murky images of a dream. I saw the Seven Deadly Sins in human form, wearing masks. As for the Seven Sleepers of Ephesus, legendary Christian martyrs hidden in a cave, lying in suspended animation, biding the time of their return - I'm not so sure. Could mean something. Could mean nothing. Maybe it's the number that matters, Seven. It's one of those sacred numbers after all...

Seven days in a week. Seven Seas. Seven deadly sins.

Seven Brides for Seven Brothers?

Right - really funny.

St Septimus was as empty by day as by night. I sat in the front pew for an hour, then scoured the church for clues, coming up with nada. Looking for the priest, I tried the door to the sacristy, but it was locked. That's when I really started to wonder about the pastor of St Septimus.

Why was his church left unsupervised? I felt that I was being watched, in that quiet church. Sure, that's the oldest feeling in the book, usually unfounded. Whatever, I had the strong sensation that something or someone was observing me. To tell the truth, I suspected that even the statues were staring at me. Such grotesque statues, too... A blind archangel, with broken wings. A saint with a haloed skull sprouting out of his collar. A cherubim with two heads. As for the stained glass windows, it took me some time to work out the bewildering displays, chaotic, at first glance. Then I grasped the underlying motif in each window, heaven and hell. Fair enough you might think. Except heaven was in the lower half of each window and hell was upper. Hell looked down on heaven. Demons lorded it over saints. God and the church of St Septimus were obviously not on the best of terms. But all this grotesquerie didn't point me the way to the Dealer.

I sat down near the altar, ready to chuck in the towel for the day. Not a clue in sight. Then it hit me, and I cursed myself for my stupidity. It was in a name:

St Septimus.

Septimus: Seven.

That number again.

Killing the Dealer - I'd be willing to play God on that score. Right or wrong, I'd do it - if only to spare future victims.

But if there were six others...

Seven slaughters...

No. No way. That would make a serial killer of me. I won't do it.

I won't.

I've just realised something, tomorrow's Friday the thirteenth. I'm not superstitious, but...

The bedside lamp has just turned itself on.

The open bed is a trap, waiting for me to fall right in.

There's a spider on the pillow.

Friday April 13 3.15pm

I lost my mind this morning. It was a hard fight to get it back. He's coming nearer, that being in the dream, the one I thought was Santa Claus when my wits were in bedlam. He has a red robe, a hooded red robe. And that's about all he has in common with Father Christmas. I don't think this guy is bringing me any presents.

There's a remorseless quality about him.

Stern. Inhuman. Maybe he's the Devil, after

all. His voice was remote,

like a

monastic bell

from a coastal

island. He said he was coming for me

tonight. I distinguished

two more

words,

Arachne...

Deliverer...

I'm glancing at the spiders in my room, the festoons of cobwebs. I think I can guess what Arachne signifies. As for the identity of the Deliverer, something inside tells me to simply look in a mirror.

The light-bulb keeps flickering on and off, at this rate, it'll be strobing before midnight. The microwave has just turned itself on I think. I know who's behind the electrical anomalies.

Me.

Microwave man.

I'm changing. I can feel it. But I can't tell whether I'm going mad or doing a butterfly from chrysalis number.

Hell, I haven't even crossed out a single word in pages! Surely that means I'm not losing my wits? No, on second thoughts, it doesn't mean a thing.

I'm afraid.

I'm growing, metamorphosing into God knows what. Or I'm becoming a complete madman. Either way I'm afraid.

A spider has spun a web on my pillow. I think I'm beginning to understand the pattern. We speak in code because we think in riddles.

Arachne... in Greek mythology, a maiden transformed into a spider, Arachne, spinner of webs.

Webs.

Dreams.

The Seven.

It's swirling round in my skull.

I read an ancient gospel a short while back, the Gospel of Truth. There's a passage in it that's known as the Nightmare Parable. I found a lot of unnerving echoes in it. Here - I'll write part of it down:

'...they lived as if they were sunk in sleep and found themselves in disturbing dreams. Either there is a place to which they are fleeing... or they are striking blows, or receiving blows themselves, or they have fallen from high places...

Sometimes people seem to be murdering them, though there is no-one even pursuing them or they themselves are killing their neighbours, for they have been stained with their blood...'

The writer of that gospel viewed human life as a sleep of ignorances, and ignorance the source of evil.

So should I listen to dreams?

God the panic's coming back. I'm going crazy or inhumanly sane God help me either way.

Sleep.

Sleep's dragging me down.

Angel, Eden help me. Don't let midnight strike.

I renounce everything. I'm falling.

Falling.

Sleep.

Dreamweb.

Saturday April 14

My name is Ryan.

I am the Deliverer.

I am an executioner.

Hunter of the Seven.

It's like killing Hitler.

CLUB FOOTBALL - THE MANAGER

Now's your chance to manage your own car factory. Not impressed? Well you should be. Detroit is an original concept and gives you the chance to design and build your very own cars and see if they sell on the streets. It's comprehensive and there is no action in sight, but it will keep you playing for hours and hours.

We don't get too many good Amiga games here in Australia and so when you get the chance to play one you usually jump. Valhalla is the best game I've played for ages. At times the puzzles will seem a little illogical but you know that the solution is just around the corner. The speech turns it into a classic adventure.

Why companies think that making an RPG huge is a good thing is beyond me. Ishar 3 is technically brilliant but too big to enjoy. Locations look too similar and it's easy to lose track of where you are. To use a cliché, size isn't important, and this is proved well enough in this case. A shame because I was really looking forward to playing it.

Right, if I see one more person slagging this off I'll have their heads. Braben has come up with the best game ever, that's that. E-Motion

Publisher Kixx Collection

Price £4.99

One of the most bizarre puzzle games ever, makes yet another welcome appearance on the Amiga – this time courtesy of the £4.99 Kixx Collection. The idea is to fly your little ship thing around a screen and push coloured spheres into other spheres of matching colours.

It sounds simple, and indeed the concept is, but the game itself is amazingly tricky to get the hang of. All of the spheres are connected to others in some way, and a funny sort of gravity effect makes your life far more difficult than you would imagine it to be.

I spent a good few hours playing this, and that is extremely rare for a game that I have seen before. E-Motion is a very relaxing game due to the pastel colours and gentle music, and is something that no self respecting Amiga owner can afford to be without, especially at this price.

This game is so old that I would imagine they started programming it for an abacus. Still, it'll only set you back five quid, so there's not much you can really complain about. Actually that's not true, there's plenty.

The scrolling is laughable, the animation ridiculous and the action stilted to say the least. What's more annoying is that for some inexplicable reason, it keeps playing snatches of a naggingly familiar tune while the game is in progress, Ice Hockey style. Why? Don't ask me.

This game is dire in the extreme, and what makes it even worse is that when it first came out it was my favourite game for months. I'm cringing just at the mere thought of it. Even a fiver seems steep now, and long consideration is recommended before you even contemplate buying a game that is less fun than having your testicles trapped in a drawer.

Indiana Jones - Action

Publisher Kixx Collection

Price £4.99

I know I know, it's old and it's not fair to compare it with the efforts of today, but I played Indy almost back to back with the CD32 version of Audiogenic's Bubble & Squeak, and at that time I couldn't really believe anyone ever considered this good enough to be released. I've calmed down a bit now, and having thought about it, I can see that it does have certain merits.

For instance, as with all of this particular Kixx range, it's disgustingly cheap and therefore worth consideration. Also, I know that people who are far more easily pleased than I am, could find plenty of whip cracking mayhem concealed within. This is a good one for parents to buy for their young kids if they're desperate to keep them quiet for a few hours. It's cheap, cheerful, totally inoffensive, but unfortunately not very good.

I wasn't aware that this had ever come out on the Amiga to be honest. I know that the PC has parts three and four of this excellent series, but thought that part two was the end of the line as far as the Amiga was concerned. Apparently I was wrong.

Anyway, this instalment sees Sonny Bonds now married to former 'good time girl' Sweet Cheeks Marie (remember, she helped him nail the Death Angel in Police Quest 1). Now, the brother of Bonds' arch-enemy is out for revenge, and the target is Sonny's good lady wife.

This is the most sophisticated of the series and I love it. Featuring realistic sound effects, hand painted backdrops and plenty of brutal ritual killings and other scary stuff, this really is an essential purchase for any adventure loving Amiga owner – even though ELSPA classified it as not suitable for anyone under the age of fifteen. These games are a bit thin on the ground nowadays, and you won't get many better offers than this I can tell you. Buy it!

What needs to be said? The name itself is a legend, and that is reason enough to buy it without me waffling on about the merits of the thing. But, just in case it's not, I will. The game simulates a full Grand Prix racing season in spectacular style. That in itself doesn't sound too exciting when you look at the races today, but remember this was programmed a couple of years ago, when the so-called sport was actually worth watching.

This is a quality racing game, the like of which has not been seen since. By far the most amazing factor is the speed. Even on an A500 the game moves faster than Jos Verstappen trying to get out of his car in the pit lane. On a 1200 it just has to be seen to be believed. Truly awesome and a game that you just have to buy.

What's this doing out on budget already? Surely it was only this morning that I was being shown the pre-production version by an eager MicroProse PR person, desperate to get a review in the same issue. What? Oh. That was fourteen months ago was it?

Ahem. In that case... it's about time this came out on budget. What are MicroProse playing at taking this long?o unleash it again.

As far as helicopter sims go, this is streets ahead of the competition. The tension is unbearable at times as you try and shake off a heatseeker or lurk behind a mountain awaiting just the right moment to pop up and wipe out a tank division. The only downside is that it is very tricky for all but the most experienced flight sim addict, and to be honest, I spend far more time crashing into the ground than hovering over the smouldering wreckage of my primary target. But with a little practise, I'm sure you'll get the hang of it. Well worth a look for the price.

Waggler

Online PD

Ooh, we're off to a roaring start with this one because it's got a Metallica soundtrack. You can't beat a bit of thrash metal first thing in the morning can you? And Metallica. Yum! My favourite. Thankfully the option comes up to turn this "Devil's music" off and replace it with sound effects which consists of a crowd cheering you on. Cheering you on to do what you ask?

Well, waggle your joystick boy. Let me make it very clear that I refuse to get drawn into the old joystick/willy connection, but the idea is to waggle your joystick as quickly as possible, while amassing millions of points and keeping an eye on the constantly ticking counter. It's murder on the equipment as well as the arms, but it's good if you've got your mates round. Why not invite some girls too for an evening of stick-wagging high jinks.

Beavis & Butthead

Online PD

Take this heavy metal filth away from me. Every disk I load is accompanied by hairy metal. Beavis & Butthead, stars of the anarchic (and not very good unless you're fond of American teenagers) MTV cartoon series have eventually arrived on the PD scene. There's lots of speech and pictures of the pair, but the game itself (one or two players) is a bit sad. Drive your bike around the garden avoiding the dogs. Hmm. Playability eh? You can't beat it.

Super Ham & Tosis

Vision

A good-looking platform game featuring some form of garden gnome leaping around from ledge to ledge. It can be played by one or two players and other than that it's a bit bizarre really. There's something surreal about a gnome being chased around by a selection of carrots. Anyway, it's all good fun and well programmed, so a gold star.

BEAVIS & BUTT-HEAD: Ooh B&B are the funniest creation of all time. Yes indeed

Game of the Month Bungee Tank

Smang

Quite good this. I enjoyed it despite the obvious simplicity. You control a tank and have to travel around some mazes firing a bungee rope (one of those rubber things you tie to yourself before leaping from a crane) at some pod type things. You can then drag them to a hole and dispose of them. Of course the rope is elastic, so it doesn't behave as you might expect, and any contact with the walls or pods means the loss of one of your three lives. Some of the later levels are quite tricky to work out, and it does make you want to play it again. Nice.

ISLAND: Check out this version of the popular board game - Hotels. It's pretty good if you get a few mates around. Really!

telly ad (Crockett's Theme). To be honest, when I was offered the choice of worlds, I thought I was in for a bit of a Marble Madness clone and I was quite looking forward to it. A press of the firebutton later and I was involved in Pong of all things. Fifi is a good version with a strange name. There's plenty of choice as far as PD Pong goes, but this is definitely one of the better offerings to date.

Island

Roberta Smith DTP Disk G-059

Anyone who's played the "popular" board game, Hotels (and unfortunately I have never had that privilege), will be familiar with the idea behind Island. Two players each take over a successful leisure company and start to build hotels with the express intention of putting the other out of business... and that's all there is to it really. It's not as simple as it sounds, but it's a good laugh if you like board games. You could do a lot worse.

Workbench Games 5

The Assassins

We finish this month's selection with our old mates The Assassins and their latest disk packed full of games to run on your Workbench. There's plenty to choose from, but the pick of the bunch is undoubtedly Mini Arkanoid. This brought a lot of memories flooding back, as the game is remarkably similar to the original. Others include Raps, Blackjack and Slider. There's nothing highly original or technically brilliant about any of the games, it's just a pleasant, playable compilation that a lot of people will enjoy. Don't forget you can get any of the hundreds of other Assassins compilations from the address below too. We'll be reviewing more next month.

Join Steve McNally as he cops a free lunch from Krisalis and writes an epic three page WIP feature on the forthcoming Legends

Top: The playing area is much more vast than you would at first assume. Not only do you have the main landscape, you also have the interior of many buildings, along with intricate caves and mine locations Above: A handy map of each level has been provided, mainly to prevent you wasting time wandering aimlessly around trying to find a certain location

Legends from Krisalis is going to be massive. Not just on one count, but two. Firstly, the game itself is absolutely huge, set over several enormous levels. There are four different quests, dozens of characters to interact with and plenty of interesting sub-games dotted around the place.

Secondly, this is going to sell faster than nude Take That posters at an all girl secondary school. Why? Because there is absolutely nothing like it on the Amiga, and it does something that I've been hoping a software house would do for a long time, ie take the boredom and rigidity out of an RPG and inject a little fun in their place.

Games like the Ishar series, Eye of the Beholder and so on are all well and good, but there are only so many times you can put up with what is basically the same game with a different storyline. Simply pointing the mouse at a compass and clicking once to move a step forward just doesn't cut it for me anymore. I want action, I want excitement and I want to use a joystick every once in a while. Admittedly, I prefer games that make you think, but what's wrong with thinking while using a comfortable control method?

Work In Progress

Legend in its own time

Legends addresses all of these problems and comes up with what looks like a unique (for the Amiga at least) gaming experience.

Legends is played at a forced 3D first person perspective, and incorporates a cartoony, easy on the eye graphical style which, while maybe not as detailed as some other efforts, is perfect for this game, summing up its entire nature in one fell swoop.

I have to say it I suppose, Krisalis can't really take all the credit for any of the points mentioned above, because, let's face it, it could be a Zelda game. Zelda, for those who don't know, is a highly successful series of RPGs in a similar vein programmed by Japanese console giants, Nintendo.

Apart from a brief foray with Philips' CD-i technology, no non-Nintendo machine has really benefited from the delights this style of game can offer. When you think about it, it's strange that no one has tried it in the past. OK, the style is perfectly suited to the keyboardless console, but it works just as well on the Amiga. Krisalis have decided to redress the balance, and are hoping to unleash Legends on to a previously unsuspecting public sometime early next year.

When you are told that a project has been designed by the people responsible for the excellent Sabre Team (also from the Krisalis stable), you can be fairly confident that you're in for a treat. When you are subsequently told that they have worked on it solidly since finishing the SAS simulator some two years ago, it is difficult to contain the gasps of anticipation and excitement that begin to build.

Hearing the storyline is somewhat of a blessed relief. Although it is a rather cringeworthy cliché fest, and I'll go into that in a moment, the best thing for me by far, is the fact that it isn't one of those annoying King's Quest-esque rescue the princess from the clutches of the evil sorcerer/witch/goblin etc'em-up that it could so easily have turned into.

Right, here goes. In the future, it turns out that the Earth has been an alien experiment all along, and the aliens have decided that our planet is far too peaceful. Being the destructive sort, they fancy disrupting the future by altering the course of time. They decide that the best way to do this is to provide the inhabitants of certain key periods in time with sophisticated weaponry.

With such arsenals at their disposal, they can wreak havoc, death and destruction on everybody, hopefully leading to a much more violently minded human race.

The aliens hastily zapped back the high-tec equipment to the Ancient Egyptians, the Wild West, the noble people of Arthurian England, and the thoughtful types that inhabited China around the time of Confucius. Right, time for a hero. You have stumbled upon the aliens plot, and have decided that the human race needs someone to take charge and put an end to all this violent nonsense.

You realise that you somehow have to get someone back to each of the time periods concerned, and nip the vile deeds in the bud.

You swiftly knock up a time machine, but to your horror you discover that anyone you attempt to send back to the past ends up dripping down the walls rather than valiantly fighting off hordes of red Indians as was your initial intention.

'This is going to sell faster than nude Take That posters at an all girl secondary school'

Above: A lovely day sees you questing away. You should be able to tell which level this is simply by looking at the surroundings, and more importantly, the main character. Above Right: Another of the sub games, this time a bizarre Pacman/gardening hybrid in which you must avoid the ghosts while collecting all of the weeds to receive a pair of rubber suckers (?)

Left: The Egyptian level is, at the moment, the most incomplete level we have seen, with plenty of puzzles, quests and buildings yet to be added Above: The warrior hero of the Arthurian Mythology scenario takes a midnight stroll through a spooky graveyard. Wooo! Above Right: Mending the clock tower is a job for the local handyman. Unfortunately he has no means of getting up there and fixing it, so once again it's down to yours truly to come up with a means to this particular end

'There are four different quests, dozens of characters to interact with and plenty of interesting sub games dotted around the various levels to keep your interest level peaking at all times'

A few hasty modifications and a swift bang on the top, and you have a machine which can't actually send people back in time, but can beam their spirit and mind into one of the natives of the various periods. When they get there, they will have to undertake various quests, helping out the other natives to gain favours in return.

This can entail run of the mill mundane things like clearing weeds, or providing an odd job man with a method of scaling the side of a broken clock tower. But, rest assured, for every task you successfully complete, you will be rewarded with a useful item that will be required to complete the game.

Each of the levels is huge, even at this stage, when a lot of the puzzles, problems and sub-games have yet to be added. Each of the levels is highly varied, and feature puzzles relevant to the time period in question. This gives you a real incentive to progress on to the next level, something which is sadly lacking from the vast majority of today's games.

The only downside I can think of is that the game is so far away from completion.

February seems like a long way off to me, and now that the fire has been stoked as far as this game is concerned, it is difficult not to wish that it was coming out sooner. I suppose that if it was rushed out and packed with flaws, I would be one of the first to complain, but I can't help feeling it's a shame it won't be out in time to clean up at Christmas.

Patience is not one of my better virtues, so no doubt I'll be tearing my hair out soon. A

Aladdin

Bad guys come in a variety of forms. These range from washer women lobbing dishes out of nearby windows to skinny blokes throwing bottles straight at you. All can be disposed of either with your trusty blade or by hurling apples at them. I haven't seen the film, so don't ask me if this is relevant to the plot or not, okay? I just want to be left alone. Is that a problem?

Over the past couple of years, Disney have undergone a bit of a revival in the old cartoon film stakes. The new breed of Disney films – Beauty and the Beast, Aladdin, and now The Lion King, have no doubt made the bank managers even happier than before. Never one to miss an opportunity, Virgin Interactive, in association with Walt's boys, are about to bring a platform game to the Amiga that will rival the consoles... or have we heard that before?

With hot news (see the news pages surprisingly) abound of the same team already beavering away on an Amiga version of The Lion King, things are definitely looking good for the machine next year. If only everybody would settle down and produce quality software instead of wondering, "What if Commodore this and what if Commodore that?" Soapbox over with for today.

Unlike some platform games, the control on Aladdin works just fine, and there don't seem to be too many frustrating points where you find yourself falling to an untimely death. It all depends whether you're a fan of 'up' to jump or not. Some people hate it and others don't mind at all. Either way, once you're used to the control, you're laughing all the way to the casbah.

With every release, Disney are surpassing themselves in the field of quality animation. Having seen Aladdin on the consoles, I was a bit sceptical of how this A1200 version would turn out. But, within minutes of our pre-release disks being loaded, there was a crowd around the table (that's a bit bland I know!) waiting to have a go. Even this one level effort had people wondering how it had been done.

I am reliably informed that the tune on the level we have in the office is taken from the film (which kind of makes sense I'm sure you'll agree). It is therefore reasonable to assume that all the other scores will be from said film too. It's actually quite good, and doesn't grate at all, which is always a bonus. Other than that, sound effects seem to be few and far between.

Being Aladdin and all, genies tend to play a fairly big part. Even though I haven't seen the film, that big blue floating thing (genie?) is all over the show. Running over him on any level gives you a nice new restart point, and picking up a lamp acts as a smart bomb and kills off any enemies that are unlucky/foolish enough to be on the screen.

The best thing about Aladdin – the Amiga version, is undoubtedly the animation of the main character himself. This shouldn't really be surprising when you take into account the pedigree of the parent company behind it all, but great credit must be heaped upon the programmers for the marvellous job they have done so far. I'll reserve judgement until I see it all together obviously, but I don't think I'll be disappointed.

If all this has whetted your appetite, you can expect to see a full review in the Amiga Action Christmas special which will be on sale at the end of November. We'll also be able to tell you a little bit more about The Lion King then too, so make sure you don't miss it. Get your order in at the newsagents now.

Aladdin isn't just a left to right scrolling game either. Sometimes ropes have to be climbed, and some chasms have to be negotiated by dangling dangerously by your hands over pits of fire and stuff. Exciting or what? Throw in your regular dose of disappearing platforms, and you have well, the Mega Drive version. But then there's nothing wrong with that is there?

The main sprite is constantly moving on screen. Even if you have to leave him for a minute or so you'll come back into the room to find him juggling away or leaning on his sword and yawning. Another thing worth mentioning is the animation on his pants! MC Hammer has got nothing on these babies let me tell you! Check these out everybody!

Crystal Dra

Magnetic Fields were quiet for a while until the release of Kid Chaos by Ocean. Now, their second release in a couple of months is set to arrive, courtesy of Kompart and Black Legend. Surprisingly, it's a full blown RPG in the style of the classic Dungeon Master. There's no fancy graphics, as MF have concentrated entirely on gameplay instead. Let's take a closer look.

Unlike Dungeon Master, where you took a party of four deep into the murky depths, Crystal Dragon only has two daring heroes to battle with. Right from the off you are confronted with a puzzle. You can't actually get into the dungeon unless you work out the code that unlocks the door. After that, it's exactly what you'd expect from a game like this – endless winding corridors and constant fighting.

Dungeon Master was the game that started off the 16-bit revolution, and many people bought their STs just to play it. Things have obviously come a long way since then however, and graphics have been tarted up to the digitised extent of Ishar 3 and the rotating landscape of Ambermoon. Crystal Dragon takes everything back to basics and does a good job of it too.

Cyberwar

The CD32 is fast becoming a platform for achieving things not normally possible on the Amiga. More programmers are beginning to take advantage of the CD technology, and the guys at SCI are no exception.

The game is actually a follow up to the Lawnmower Man which never actually made it to the Amiga. The screenshots here are from the PC version, but a CD32 release is set for the first quarter of 1995 (which isn't that far away really if you think about it).

Drawing on elements of the original film, the plot of the game sees you in conflict with Jobe, a Cyber God. It all sounds a bit confusing, but as the whole thing is based around Virtual Reality, that's not too surprising.

The PC CD-Rom version is spread across four disks, but at this stage we're not sure whether this will be the case with the CD32, or whether the game will be cut dramatically. We will of course let you know just as soon as we find out.

In the meantime, if you fancy some "brain-popping logic puzzles, coupled with a number of flight and weapons simulations", then you're just going to have to grit your teeth and wait until the Christmas dust settles.

Patience is definitely a virtue.

Black Legend have got such a hectic release schedule leading up to the festive period, that they've decided to hold back on Crystal Dragon so that it doesn't get lost amongst the abundance of other games they have lined up. Instead, Crystal Dragon will spearhead the New Year releases for this bustling young company, and it doesn't look like there'll be a better way to spend the start of 1995.

And as for Magnetic Fields? Well, they seem to have done everything now. Race games, platformers and now this RPG. Where next? Well who knows, but it seems like Shaun Southern and Andrew Morris are only content when making games packed with playability. That has to be good for the future of the Amiga in general. Watch out for a full review of Crystal Dragon early in the New Year.

The first thing you notice about Crystal Dragon is its incredible playability. It is totally mouse controlled and there's no real fiddling about clicking on all different parts of the screen when it comes to fight time. As you can tell from the screenshots, the graphics aren't as sophisticated as other games, but trust us when we say that the playability seems to match all that has gone before it.

Pinball Illusions

Regular readers will remember our two part Pinball Illusions feature a couple of months back. We are now in a position to take a closer look at how it's all coming along. The finishing touches are just being added to the majority of the game, but the Law and Justice table is all ready for a final polish.

In case you're new to the scene, Pinball Illusions is the third silverball game from 21st Century. The previous two have set a standard which is yet to be challenged, let alone beaten, and the way this is shaping up, it looks like taking everything a stage further.

New features worth mentioning are the low/high resolution modes, where simply by pressing a key, you can flip the whole table into beautiful high resolution graphics on your A1200. Ball movement has been enhanced, and made more realistic too. The ball actually looks like a real pinball now, and seems to act more convincingly.

Sit back and let these screenshots whet your appetite until we have a review, hopefully next month. Bye then.

Premier Manager 3

As is traditional with Premier Manager, you begin life in the Conference league and need to struggle your way to glory. Fortunately now, you don't have to do it alone, because you have at your disposal an assistant manager. He will be more than happy to take care of the more mundane day-to-day activities. For example, contracts play an important part, and while you're busy wrangling in the transfer market – which itself is far more complex and, I suppose, realistic – he'll be tying down the important players and setting them to work on pre-season training. And stuff.

Football management games are two a penny these days, and consequently it's more difficult than ever to impress with them. Surely just about every feature possible has already been used. Over the last couple of years, fans of management 'sims' have become divided in much the same way as the arcadesters were over Sensible and Kick Off 2. Championship Manager and Premier Manager are the two divisive forces – you'll struggle to find any computer footballer who doesn't bear allegiance to one or the other. And, with news that Championship Manager 2 is slated for a new year release, Gremlin have gone back to the drawing board to give themselves a bit of a half time talking to.

As well as deciding what formation your players will take up, you'll have a damn sight more say in what kind of attributes they display during the match. Before a game begins, each player can be looked at in turn, and you can determine how much of their time they spend running, passing, playing long balls, short balls, how aggressively they tackle, where defenders mark etc., etc. And remember, this is for every single player – a real fanatics dream. Ground improvements have changed too, and are much more understandable than in PM2.

Premier Manager 3 is once more programmed by Realms of Fantasy, responsible for the first two super-successful efforts in the trilogy, and the basic mechanics of the game will be instantly recognised by fans. The original game was found by many to be a touch easy, a problem which the second more than addressed, and there is to be no let up with the difficulty this time either. The statistics of the players are a great deal more in-depth too, with heading ability just one extra factor to consider.

The match sequence, in my opinion, is a much overrated feature of this type of game – I just want to know the outcome after all my pre-match hard work. However, mine is a minority view, and Gremlin have constantly improved this aspect, culminating in what we see here. Both teams are represented in their correct strips and everything. Possession is displayed correctly, and, should you choose a slow enough speed, aspects such as a particularly long run or a good cross can be plainly seen. It appears to be the best of its kind.

Turbo Trax

Overhead racing games seem to be back in vogue at the minute. Team 17 have ATR on the horizon and Arcane, better known for their Amiga graphics conversions, have decided that they're going to have a dabble too. And why not? They've spent a year working on Turbo Trax and it's all coming on rather nicely if you ask us. Take a look at this Blueprint and see what you think for yourselves eh?

To whet your appetite this month we'll tell you a little bit about it. Turbo Trax is an overhead perspective racing game with five different types of car, 25 tracks, realistic collision detection, an arcade mode, a shop where you can buy spares, and very nice graphics indeed. There will also be five different scenarios to race, including a forest, ice, and Indy Cars.

Arcane are a company that only some of you will have noticed before. They have an impressive pedigree and yet "Who are they?". Well, they are the company responsible for the graphics on games like Syndicate, Populous 2, the intro on Birds of Prey, and more recently, Dragon on the Mega Drive and SNES. So what? Well, they've got a game and it's nearly ready for release.

The cars will include a sports car, a jeep, a 4X4 land-rover type thing, a dune buggy and an Indycar. Each will handle differently and will have their own plus and minus points.

Prize money can be accumulated and spent in the shop which appears at the end of each race. You can purchase new steering, acceleration, traction and nitros from here, as well as have your damaged vehicle repaired.

Arcane now reckon they have everything just right, and the title will hopefully be released in the first week of December this year. From what we've seen so far it looks extremely promising, and it will be interesting to see how it fares against Team 17's ATR. There should be a full review in our Christmas Special this time next month, and make sure you watch out for some bonus tracks on our coverdisks in the near future.

Turbo Trax is the first game that David Eggesdon and John Raymond have programmed, although they've both been converted from the Amiga demo scene. Other names to note are Adam Pracey (music), Mark Wortham, Mark Keeley and Ben McGrath (Graphics), and finally Steve Iles (Project manager). We had a big long chat with Steve who told us that the game has been under development for the best part of a year. During this time, several major changes have been incorporated into the original design.

Look Who's Talking Too

When we first met Vulcan software all those months ago, we didn't know if they'd still be around at this stage of the game. Now, with the tremendous success of Valhalla and the Lord of Infinity behind them, things have never looked brighter for Paul and Lisa – the minds behind, in our opinion, one of the most original adventures ever. Let's see what they've been up to.

Before the War

Before we talk about completely new projects, now seems like a good time to mention what could be described as Valhalla v1.1 if you like. Valhalla – Before the War will be a special budget priced follow up for people who just can't get enough Valhalla in their lives. You won't need the original to play these two new huge levels, and you get the chance to control things from Infinity's point of view. It's all the same sort of stuff we know and love, and we'll be taking a closer look, probably next month.

Timeslip

Timeslip is the brand new Vulcan title we're all eagerly awaiting. Looking at the screenshots, the more sceptical amongst you might suggest, "it looks a bit like Valhalla". But, is there anything wrong with that? Anyway, the project itself is completely different, as you are about to find out for yourselves.

The main character's design changes regularly to accommodate the current puzzle (sort of like Lemmings 2 in a way we suppose), and the finished result is awaited here at Amiga Action with some interest. Unfortunately it's going to be next March before Timeslip is finished, so we'll be taking a proper look at it some time in the early New Year.

It comes as no surprise to learn that Vulcan have gone for a heavy speech-laden fest once again. They've pioneered the idea and Timeslip will feature even more of the spoken stuff. You must take control of 112 humans from our future who unfortunately were thrown back into eight various time zones when an experiment went badly wrong. Jeepers!

GIVING THE GAME

Robinsons Requiem

PART 1

In general we don't do solutions to games that we have reviewed in the same issue. However, Robinson's Requiem will doubtless cause no end of problems due to its complexity, so we decided to make it an exception

Jungle Book

Welcome to your new home. Your parachute has set you down in the heart of a jungle, so get your wits about you right now. You need to keep your eyes open all the time for anything that could prove useful. You're going to need to stock up on food, and kit yourself out with the tools of your survival. Remember to constantly check your health using your Sesame computer, always anticipate threats to your health rather than wait for the symptoms. Everything you need to stay alive on this planet is here, it's just a matter of using your ingenuity and intuition. But remember, staying alive is just the first stage in your bid to escape. Follow these guidelines and you may stand a fighting chance...

Begin by heading Eastwards through the passage on the left between the mountains. Tread carefully and look for changes in the terrain as there are steep drops and banks which can lead to broken bones. Soon you will come across the wreckage of your spaceship, so take what is yours - collect five wires from the debris and collect the medicines from behind the ruin. This is essential, your medical kit will keep you alive.

Now return to the South. Then go to the East until you come to a lake. Here you will encounter another Robinson Agent. You may be tempted to shake hands and enquire as to his health, but remember, it's every man for himself on this planet and staying alive means dispensing with some of the niceties. He has possessions you need, so you must kill him. Take the matches, a gourd, the computer and the battery from him, and pick up his knife which has fallen to the ground.

Now you have a knife you can cut loose. Find yourself some food, but be careful, as the pears on the tree by the lake are not edible. Using the knife, collect branches and leaves from the trees. These are your building materials. You can make a hat using the leaves and the needle in your kit bag. Now get yourself a supply of water. You can fill the gourd you took from your fellow prisoner - just click on USE, then get sufficiently close to the lake. Click on the gourd and drag it near to the water and it will fill.

Unfortunately the lake is not full of French mountain mineral water, so you would be advised to disinfect it before drinking. Use a sterilisation tablet or light a fire to boil it ("USE" icon).

In the vicinity of the lake there are three cauliflowers concealed in hidden recesses. They are rather heavy, so you would be wise not to lug them around with you. Remember, the weight of the bag you are carrying directly affects your level of fatigue. It is best to eat them as and when you find them. Now return to the West as far as the end of the mountain.

Recover the following along the way in the recesses of the mountain: to the South, earthworms in a heap of earth, and to the North, a cauliflower.

Take the road to the South, follow it and go up the mountain. On the left of the slope is a cauliflower. Eat it.

Now you must go into combat. The birds on this planet are not the twittering sparrow type. You must fight the eagle and kill it.

Now use the knife to collect meat and feathers from the eagle. Recover the eggs and a large bunch of feathers from the nest - you will need these later...

Now go back down the mountain and continue towards the North. At the entrance to the road, prepare to meet a friend who is not all he appears to be. When you have killed him, look in the grass close by for his Sesame computer. If you find it, take it. Follow the narrow pass to the West, but watch out, there is a tiger at the entrance to the road, and tigers on this planet are particularly menacing creatures. They will attack without provocation and few weapons are effective against their lethal lunge. Your best bet is to pass it by crawling on your hands and knees (click both right and left mouse buttons), bypassing it via the road which leads to the North.

Having successfully avoided imminent death, continue along the road right to the end towards the South, and collect some resin from a tree. By using the resin and a branch, you can make a torch. Now continue along the road towards the North and turn left at the crossing. Swallow your fear and trepidation, light the torch and enter the cave.

Ali Baba's Cave

The caves are dark and dank, as all proper caves should be, and they are full of numerous mutant Ali Babas. A word of warning – there may be hidden precipices in the ground, so tread carefully. In the main cave, recover a computer on the floor. A very long corridor to the North leads to a dead end. If you get this far, use your knife to scrape off Saltpetre – it will come in handy later. At this stage you would be wise to take some antibiotics.

Remember, climate and environment affect your health and there's nothing like a damp, cold cave to bring on a dose of flu. Now take the West exit and head towards the marshes.

PART 3

The Marshes

The marshes are one of the more unpleasant parts of the planet, and will begin to test your survival skills for real. Until now, you've just been getting yourself acclimatised.

Beware! Do not go into the marshes at night, as a tyrannosaurus roams around and kills anything that moves.

Numerous monsters may attack in the main clearing. Four roads lead to the West. The one furthest to the North leads to a tree with edible grapes. Check your energy levels – it may be wise to eat and get some rest. The second road leads to a small clearing where there are five melons hidden in tall grass. The third road leads to a Robinson. Be sociable – talk to him and take the necklace he offers you.

You may want to collect the fruit from the Yks'Ykd'Yk, in this clearing. It is a type of drug. Now take the fourth road which is the furthest to the South: it leads to a village. Watch out! Along this road, carnivorous plants must be killed or avoided. If you are bitten by a carnivorous plant you must act fast as its bite is poisonous. The necklace your fellow Robinson gave you has an important use. Put it around your neck and you won't be attacked by the horsewomen from the village.

You may want to go and listen to the Headwoman of the village, right up in the North. Not far from her, you can find a stegosaurus, whose milk you can take, simply by validating the gourd on the udders. After collecting creepers with the knife (by clicking on them), you can make a bow by combining a branch and a creeper:

Bow = branch + creeper

Similarly: arrow = branch + feather; fishing rod = branch + creeper + safety pin + earthworm

Now you should be getting used to the idea of using the environment to your own ends. Try experimenting – combining different elements and clicking on the build icon. You can fish at any of the watering places by selecting the HOOK icon in the USE action. Return to the mutant Ali Baba cave and pass through it in order to reach the jungle.

Right, that's all we've got space for this month. Keep an eye out in the next issue for the next instalment of our epic GTGA.

Universe

How about a guide for gamers having trouble getting started in Core Design's quality point 'n' click futuristic adventure. Allow Amiga Action to take you on a trip around the world of Universe. Enjoy!

PART ONE Master of the Universe

The first thing you must do as you begin the adventure is to jump off the disconnected service channel and on to the awaiting asteroid floating in space below. Search around the asteroid for a bent metal bar and a circuit board, making sure that you have visited each of the many screens that comprise the rock. Once you've got these items you must jump on to the spinning rock that floats past every so often. Wait on the screen nearest to the space station

This is quite tricky, but good timing is the key to success, and although you may have a couple of failed attempts you'll get there in the end. If you miss it, don't worry, pick yourself up and try again. Once on the spinning rock, you must jump on the bridge, which is again quite tricky and timing is once more crucial. This will lead you to the next sequence of events on the space channel.

Insert the bent metal bar into the front panel of the satellite dish and then insert the circuit board.

Use the panel and a computer read-out will appear on your screen. Select the Gavric

Boris will be sucked down to the planet below if he PUSH/PULLS the air ducts on the left of the screen. You will then uncover the all-important mirror

Wait for the security droid to go past and then chuck the mirror at the door. The lasers will strike and you'll be free to enter the building

Homeworld filtration system, and you'll now be able to link up the service channel with the Gavric Homeworld by extending a bridge across the gap. All that's left for you to do now is walk heroically across the newly created bridge to the next scene.

You'll find yourself in a mysterious city with many strange creatures wandering around the screen, but be careful, as the slightest contact with some of them can prove to be very bad for your health. Move stealthily towards the air ducts on the left-hand side of the screen, and push/pull on these ducts. As a result you will get sucked down to the asteroid with the spinning rock. You'll notice that you weren't the only thing that fell down the ducts – a mirror, along with some household rubbish which you don't need, has fallen down with you. Pick it up (the mirror) because it is a highly important object and you can't progress without it.

Jump on to the spinning rock once more, then leap on to the service channel until you reach the satellite dish again. Proceed back to the screen with the air ducts, then walk to the far end of the scene and turn left to exit.

Wait for the robot to pass you by (let him see you and it will be game over), before throwing the mirror at the lasers. The laser bolts will strike the mirror and reflect back towards whatever fired them, leaving the security system neutralised and the area now safe for you to explore at your leisure.

The start of the adventure, and Boris has got a long way to go before he has a chance of getting back to Earth

Boris has found the bent metal bar. Now all he needs is the circuit board which, thankfully, is quite nearby

After leaving the flat, via the window, you'll find a rather fine and gleaming sports car. Use the control arm and you'll be able to drive away in it

Timing is of the essence when trying to leap on top of the asteroid. Miss it, and you'll have to wait a while before you can try again

Go to Silphinaa's house and use the keypad which is situated right next to the door. Once you get inside, attack the door keypad with the bent metal bar. Find the wardrobe, open it and put on the suit which you will find hanging up inside.

Use the arm computer on the console and then use the console to open the window shutter at the top of the screen. This now enables you to jump out of the window to safety before you are captured by the rampaging robots. Now use the arm computer once again, but this time on the rather flashy parked car. Once you've done that, the car will be safe to enter. You should jump in, at which point you'll discover that you can't start it and that it needs to be hot-wired before you can make good your escape!

To get the car up and running, you must insert the keycard into the slot on the left of the control panel. Use the console on the right and it will ask you for a code. This is printed in the instruction manual. Navigate a course to the lovely planet of Balkmos 7 (which is currently 3rd to the left of your existing position).

Descend to the planet and select the top-right quadrant. Pick up the droid and the spray can. Combine the droid and the can together and then use them on the aliens that are lurking nearby. Jump back into the car and leave the quadrant. Punch in a course to Jor-slev 4 (or in other words, the next planet on the map).

Descend once more and this time select the top-left quadrant of the planet. Pick up a rock from the floor and throw it hard at the alien. Use the droid on the blob and then quickly jump back into your futuristic motor vehicle, but don't leave the planet yet. This time you need to select the bottom-right quadrant.

When you arrive, talk to the old man in the hut and give him the blobs. At this point he will give you some carvite in return for your help. Jump back into your car and ascend away from the planet. Lay in a course heading back to the Pfallenop asteroids. Offer Snorglat the medicinal herbs and you can now dock with the ship. Use the left mouse button to accelerate and the right mouse button to activate the clamp. Unfortunately that concludes our guide to the first section of Universe – from here on in, you're on your own, at least until next month.

If you get stuck before then, remember that the solutions are always logical. Think about how each object you have could be used in conjunction with another.

Have a chat with Silphinaa and you'll uncover some interesting facts. Be careful not to hang about for too long, because the security droids are on their way!

Ishar 3

Ishar 3 is one of the most difficult RPGs to date, and not surprisingly, we've had loads of pleas for help. So here it is, the first part of our complete solution to the game. Part two will follow next month...

Koren Bahnir Open City

Go and visit the character (Alstar) opposite – your first task is to find the Typhus Mernith observatory on the map. Before you get to the observatory you will need to buy some lime-blossom tea from a shopkeeper (available in particular from the shop near the start of the game or the shop a little way along the Southern ramparts of the Rich town).

Be careful! You will meet some bandits in the first street. If you are playing with only one character, go into the inn to enrol some companions before fighting. Kill the bandits. Pick up the purse (killing bandits is a good way of collecting money, but be careful because they get tougher as the game progresses).

Go to the Rich town – the only way in is located on the Western ramparts, between two porches. Buy a necklace for 4,000PO from the big guard at the entrance, or it will be impossible to get by. Put the necklace on.

A word of advice – never strike a town guard, or all the guards will be aggressive for the rest of the game.

Now go to visit Typhus. Give him some lime-blossom tea (select the object, then click on Typhus' face). Pick up a playing card. Locate the house of Mather Fudius on the map.

A Useful Servant Visit Mather

Pick up, then read the parchment in front of his house. Go to the inn mentioned in the parchment (round the block of houses to the North). Listen in the inn. The servant Erkh Moltus is speaking. Pay for a meal. Listen again. Answer YES to Moltus' question. Moltus will lead you to Mather's house. In Mather's house, don't agree to leave. Give him the playing card when he says "Get out!". Wait, and the Time Gate will appear.

Advice: Before venturing into a Time Gate it is better to have a team which is carefully composed (including a scholar and a magician if possible) and well armed. This will require lots of money. You can pick up treasure in four dead-ends guarded by bandits (The North, slightly West, extreme East and in the Poor town to the South and West).

Animal Friends At Mather's Place

At Mather's place, go through the Time Gate by clicking on it. In the forest look for the way to the East guarded by a bear (a fight with wasps will ensue). Kill the bear (missiles recommended). Go through the passage. Travel South for a long way, then East when blocked. Look for a racoon on a rock and when you find it, take its parchment.

In the forest, pick up some mushrooms which you can sell on later in the town's shops. Go back to Mather's place (the opposite way). Give Mather the parchment. Pick up the key.

Go to the new house shown to the South on the map. Then, pick up a pendant and the magic flask and put the pendant on.

Now go to the inn called "The Kelonia Tasters" situated along the Southern ramparts of the Rich town. Listen. Pick up the Kelonia powder.

Buy the following potions in the neighbouring chemists: two bottles of dried mistletoe, two bottles of oil of salamander and one bottle of rat's brain. Pour all these, along with the Kelonia powder, into the magic flask.

Go back and see the racoon in the forest by taking the Time Gate in Mather's house. Make the racoon drink the contents of the magic flask.

Waiting in the Wings The Theatre

Go to the theatre in the extreme South of the Rich town. Enter after 7:00pm. Listen to Gulnar Dahlim. Give him the talisman. Wait for the Time Gate to appear at two o'clock. Go through the door.

East End Lads In the Jungle

In the jungle, follow the Southwest passage, always keeping South. In the clearing you will find a crystal which you should pick up. Leave the clearing by the road to the Northeast. Continue Southwards to the next fork, and at each crossing choose the road to the East. At the end you will meet a tribe - the "East End Lads". Fight and kill their leader.

In the jungle, you may meet several leopards. Kill them and take their skins which are highly prized by the shopkeepers of the town.

Now go back to the town (to give you a reference, the Gate is situated to the extreme Northwest).

Time Paradoxes The Library

If you tamper with the past, then you will change the future. Following the death of the leader of the East End Lads in the past, the present has changed.

The architects of the town are descendants of a new leader, and the town looks different. There is a new district to the Northwest and a garden to the South of the Rich town with newly accessible treasure which belongs to those oh-so pesky bandit types.

Optional episode: Leave the theatre. Listen to Alstar. Go to the library (Northeastern end of the Rich town) where there are coded explanations on how the Time Gates work.

Return to the jungle by the gate in the theatre. This gives you access to the future of the jungle. Go to the clearing to the South and pick up the magic sword (Beware! This sword can only be used by a well-aligned person).

Follow the road which sets off to the Northwest, then take the following directions in the order of the forks. North, East, (East), North, (North), West.

Then head Southwards and you should find yourself in a dead-end. Pick up a meteor fragment then return to the town. This is achieved by leaving the dead-end yet again and continuing in a Northwesterly direction.

Climb Every Mountain In the Garden

Go to the garden of the Rich town from the theatre, turn Northwards, take the passage Eastwards then turn Southwards again. In the garden, pick up some treasure and the meteor you find along the Northern wall. Put the fragment from the jungle on it. A Time Gate will appear giving you access to the mountains.

To stroll about in the mountains you're going to need fur coats. You can find them in several shops at affordable prices (West of the Rich town). So buy one for each of your team members, put them on and enter the Time Gate.

In the mountains, travel South as far as the precipice. Kill the bear. Continue Westwards, then Northwards. Kill the giant. After a slalom among the mountain sides, follow the road to the East. Then turn North, then West. At the passage you will have to kill the wolves. Take care! They leap forward and vanish from the screen but continue to attack you from behind. You therefore have to keep turning to hit them until they die.

Now follow the road to the North, then twice to the West. At the end, go down Southwards and at a certain point, fork West. Continue along the road and find the Time Machine. Place the crystal on it. Go back to the Time Gate.

That's it for now. More next month.

Small Tips

A moment in history is almost upon us. This is the last month of the GTGA section as we know it. From next month, Amiga Action will be teaming up with Kixx to bring you the best cheats and hints. In the meantime, send in all your cheats and solutions because there'll be some truly excellent prizes for the best we receive

Championship Manager

I suppose these two pages are all about cheating, so that's why we're printing this novel one for the ageing but classic Domark management game. If you've got player trouble (ie they're all getting too old, you have no money to buy and nobody wants your old has-beens), then this is what you should do.

First, study players of other teams that are up for sale and have clubs interested in them. Put in a bid, but pull out before the sale is made, leaving the other teams to fork out for the player. The selling teams will then have deficiencies in certain positions, and they will be queuing up to sign your old crocks! It's not really in the spirit of the game, but thanks go to Anthony Stepy of Norwich for that one.

Ishar 3

Here's a very handy tip for those of you struggling with Daze's Ishar 3. If the guide contained in this month's issue is simply not good enough for you because you can't keep your party alive, then it could be handy to know that simultaneously pressing CTRL, ALT, V with the mouse pointer completely to the left of the screen, and giving the left button a click, will restore all your life points to maximum level.

Hydrozone/Wired Chaos

If you bought a copy of last month's Amiga Action, you'll have played the two excellent games from Skull Army Software that were on the disks. Skull Army's very own David Cruickshank has written in with some tips for his games. Firstly, for Hydrozone, David says, "If there is a wall in front of you, then fly around it!" Very useful, and indeed very funny! The second and infinitely more helpful is for Wired Chaos. It only works on the registered version, so you will have to upgrade from our coverdisk demo to gain any benefit from it.

When playing a three-player game and somebody crashes into either the right or left hand walls, this makes a tiny hole which, if you're accurate, you can escape through and gain an extra two points. Handy eh?

Bump'n' Burn

Pete Hobbs of Birmingham has sent us a nice little cheat for Grandslam's excellent Bump 'n' Burn. Paul has been playing this of late, but unfortunately he's in Greece at the moment, so we haven't been able to test it. Here's what you do anyway.

On startup, exit the Options screen and when the Burning Rubber logo appears, type in ZXR7507. Type it quickly or it won't work. The screen should flash, and after the first race you'll have £9999. If you send us a list of games you'd like Pete, we'll send you some stuff out of the games cupboard for that one (if you're lucky that is!).

SON of Boggit

Here I go again, attempting to answer your adventuring queries and problems. With a smile and a cheery wave I will do my best to help if I possibly can

*h*ello again readers and welcome to the lovely, leafy treehouse that is my temporary home. As you may recall, last month I found myself in a little bit of financial bother so to speak.

The ruthless Harold Stormdrain (the only link I have so far found with my long-lost father) was demanding financial reimbursement for the information he had regarding good old dad's whereabouts.

After several anxious days spent waiting, my monthly freelance pittance from Amiga Action arrived, and I was able to give the miserly Harold just what he wanted. In return for his 'pound of flesh', he told me that the Boggit was being held captive in an underground dungeon at Sir Cyrille Grimola's palatial farmstead, and that the only way his life could be saved would be for someone to return the precious Woonsocket diamonds to their rightful place (ie Sir Cyrille's private vaults).

Apparently, these expensive gems were stolen twenty years ago by Sir Cyrille's arch-enemy, Lord Albert Rankpants, and local law states that whoever returns the jewels to Woonsocket will be granted any favour they so desire by the current ruler of the land.

So, all I have to do to win my father's freedom is determine the location of the diamonds, steal them from under the nose of Lord Albert and his followers, and deliver them safely to Sir Cyrille. I will then be able to ask for the release of the Boggit from his current incarcerated state. Simple. Hmmm.

Anyway, at least I have some idea of my destiny at last. I will spend the next couple of days preparing the treehouse for my imminent departure, then off I'll go into the wild blue yonder in search of Rankpants and the diamonds of Woonsocket.

As soon as the mercenary Stormdrain had delivered this information, he fell awkwardly as my hand slipped accidentally at a great rate of knots into the bridge of his nose. And the way he plummeted out of the treehouse screaming "Noooooooooooo!!!" only served as a reminder for me to get those pesky stairs fixed. Tsk.

Now, as I sit here writing this, with a quill made from an eagle's feather, and black ink which was squeezed from some of the Pacific's finest squids, I think it is time to collect together my thoughts and begin answering some of your questions.

I am here to serve...

The far away land of Woonsocket may look something like this. Er, or perhaps not, er

Beneath a Steel Sky

Q Can you please help me with Beneath a Steel Sky? I have got to a subway through the air vent which is in the club, but a big spider keeps killing me. Can you tell me how to get around it?

Andrew Wood, Surrey

A Once you are through the air vent, Andrew, you must go to the right and then walk through the exit which is at the top-right. If you go right again you will come across a hole in the wall. Whatever you do, it is essential that you do not walk past this hole without first locating the light socket. This can be found on the hand rail to the left of the orifice, and you will need to use the light bulb with it to provide a source of illumination. Now go to the right twice, and then leave the passageway via the lower right exit. You should now be free from the spidery problems which you are experiencing.

Monkey Island

Q Having completed Part One of The Secret of Monkey Island I have come to a grinding halt. I have thoroughly explored my newly bought ship; I've discovered how to fire the cannon and found out about the special soup which can transport me to the island(?). I have picked up and used almost every object in almost every combination. I still cannot open the rusty chests and trunks in the hold, or the locked cabinet in the Captain's cabin, and I cannot find the recipe for the soup. The crew aren't being much help either. Please tell me what pathetically obvious point I am missing.

Kerrin, Fife

A The pathetically obvious point that you are missing Kerrin, is the cereal in the cupboard in the galley. Open the cupboard, take the cereal and open that as well. You should find a key inside which can then be used to open the cabinet and the chest in the Captain's cabin. If I told you any more I'd be giving you far too much help, and I don't want to spoil the game for you, so see how you get on with this new information for the time being.

Curse of Enchantia

Q In Curse of Enchantia, in the graveyard near the end of the game, what do I do with the gravestone (if anything) as I've been stuck for ages? I do hope you can help me as I don't get stuck often and I would like to start Police Quest III. Thankyou.

Michael Sweeney, Coventry

A The gravestone is used to scare off the vampire which keeps appearing. Stand in front of the fanged horror which appears by the gravestone, and use the PUSH/PULL action on the gravestone. The vampire will then be scared away, leaving you free to explore the rest of the graveyard. I hope that has cleared things up for you a little Michael, and I wish you the best of luck with Police Quest III in the future.

Indy - Fate of Atlantis

Q As you will, I am sure be aware, there are three paths to Indiana Jones Fate of Atlantis to complete. I managed to fully complete the "Team Path", but I am stuck at the penultimate scene of the "Fight Path", and am going mental with it! In the game, I'm stuck where you are trying to gain entrance to the last scene, when you meet the Germans and the professor for the showdown.

I cannot find the right combination of the three stones. I've tried all possible 64 "in line" combinations, and countless other misaligned combinations, still without success!! I've fed the statue until I've run out of orialchum, but as far as I can remember, that comes after you align the stones properly. The clue appears to be Indy saying, "I wonder what well aligned means?", but I've tried everything I know...

Ian Waterson, Surrey

The clue you are actually looking for is contained in the Lost Dialogue, "the final entrance yielded only to contrary minds". Loosely translated, this means that you must set the three stones to the standard combination before turning each one through 180 degrees and then clicking on the spindle. As you rightly suspected, it is then that you should feed the statue with orialchum.

Darkseed is a deeply atmospheric affair reminiscent of other things that are er, also deeply atmospheric

Monkey Island is a game that crops up more often than not in my Boggit mail bag, and I'm more than willing to help out

Darkseed

I am stuck on Darkseed at the bit where the big dog is guarding the bridge. I have tried everything I know, but I can't get past him to the other side of the abyss. Can you please help?

Paul Micallef, Malta

To get rid of the dog, all you have to do is throw the stick (that was left behind by Delbert's dog) over the side of the bridge. The exceedingly stupid guardian hound will then leap off the bridge after it, thus leaving you in the clear. Simple or what?

Railroad Tycoon

Q Son of Boggit, you are not very clever, you don't know what you are talking about, etc etc.

Lots of people, everywhere

A Ahem, a couple of months ago I informed a reader, Ian Jobson of Chester, that MicroProse's excellent Railroad Tycoon could not be played on an A600 because of that particular machine's lack of a numeric keypad. However, since that time, I have received a number of letters stating that this problem can be easily bypassed by use of a "numeric keypad emulator" which is available from most PD companies. So, thanks to Ben Theobald of London, Joanne Kirk of Worcestershire, Mark Bower of Workshop and David Colledge of Hertfordshire for kindly pointing this out to me. Well, I've been under a lot of pressure lately, and anyone can make a mistake, cough, splutter, er, even me. Ahem.

Quite an embarrassing note to end on, I must admit, but thanks for all your correspondence anyway. A special mention must go to Sarandis Vrettakos from Athens who wrote a particularly heartwarming letter, and I can only apologise for not being able to help you out on this particular occasion, Sarandis. Maybe next time. Anyway, it's almost time to set off on my quest, so I'd better start packing! Until next time, farewell!

Dubious taste

OK, there's some good news and some bad news. The good news is that AA is constantly getting better. The last few issues have been the best for ages and I have been well impressed with the disks (three disks for two months – wow!) and the reviews. But I do have one small point to make, although I'm not sure who to blame.

You seem to be developing a bit of a sick sense of humour. A few months back you had a small jibe at the Argentinian player [Columbian – Paul] who was killed during the World Cup, and then in Chicken's review of Dreamweb in the latest issue he had a second opinion by Jeffrey Dahmer. In case anyone doesn't know, Jeffrey Dahmer is the American guy who was imprisoned for mass murdering and eating various parts of his victims. It doesn't bother me in particular, but I'm sure you'll agree it isn't in the best of taste.

Adam Morning, St. John, Jersey

You're absolutely correct Adam. It is in very poor taste indeed, and it's precisely that which makes us chuckle in a most self indulgent fashion. Look out for more gags about your favourite dead celebrities soon.

Big words

I am well aware that in these days of the proliferation of computer magazines, something special is needed to attract potential buyers' attention.

Your three cover disks (Amiga Action October) fitted the bill and I splashed out. It was not until I tried the Putty Squad disk however, and it didn't work, that I noticed the infinitesimally small 'A1200 only' mark.

I find this almost tantamount to cheating and would like your comments before taking the matter further.

J. Slater, Aberdare, Mid Glamorgan

I could say that you should have looked more carefully before buying the mag. I might even suggest that you consider upgrading to a higher Amiga. But, in the end, no amount of flippancy can mask the fact that you're right. Sorry about that – future A1200 demos will be more clearly marked.

Doom monger

I have some rather cool news about a CD Rom for the A1200 and Doom could be coming out for it! In case you're wondering, I'm not new to Amigas. My friend owns a PC486 and he invited me to a competition to see which computer is best. I said, "You won't stand a chance." The thing is, I can't get an Amiga over here.

I've looked everywhere including Myer (a computer shopping centre), but they said, "No we don't have any." I was disgusted. No Amigas! My uncle used to own a 500 and then up-erm, downgraded to a 486. Now I can't get good entertainment.

Could you please help Paul? If you could pass along an A1200 or A600 I'd be very grateful and would do something very nice in return!

Josh "Raiden" Waddell, Queensland, Australia

PS Just to show how generous I am I've enclosed a gift!

You'll pardon my apprehension at receiving a letter from a bloke who promises to do something very nice for me and emphasises the fact with an exclamation mark. Please don't write to me again, I feel all funny now.

By the way, if anyone else fancies sending me a free gift with little or no chance of something in return, then please feel free. Only steer clear of the poxy leather necklaces like Josh's.

Tasmaniac

DROOL, DROOL, SLOBBER, SLOBBER...

Being a new devotee of your magazine, my heart goes all a-flutter when I read all your terrific game reviews. Please take pity on us poor readers in Tasmania who sob every time a new issue comes out. We are lucky just to find anyone who sells Amiga games let alone anything as fabulous as those you review.

My son has just about promised to wash up after dinner for the rest of his life if I buy him Zool 2 for his birthday. Unfortunately, at 30 pounds, I told him not to rush out and buy a lifetime's supply of rubber gloves.

How come we pay so much for our games when you pay such a pittance for yours? It's not fair, sob, sob.

Our despair at being deprived of all these fabulous temptations at so little cost is totally indescribable – your magazine is the umbilical cord that drags us out of despair and back to sanity. Keep up the good work.
The Tassie Tart, Sonia Ashton, Penna, Tasmania

Your son? Ooh, if my mum wrote into a magazine I'd certainly want her to call herself a tart. It would make me so proud.

Anyway, we pay 30 quid for games over here too. Well I don't obviously, but the normal everyday folk do.

And stop living on Shark Point Road – it sounds far too idyllic for someone who wakes up to the factory hooter and the sound of clogs and cobbles.

Star Letter

BUM

I feel I must complain. For over three years I have been happily subscribing to Amiga Action. Every month the mag plops on to my doorstep and I hurriedly swipe it from the mat before poring over the pages that I live for. Never once have I been offended, never once have I been aggrieved and certainly never once have I been physically repulsed by the contents in any way.

Until now. What I was forced to witness this month was so lurid, so low and so unexpected, that I have spent the majority of the last two or three weeks in the bathroom, scrubbing vigorously [? – Paul] in an attempt to rid myself of the filth that overcame me.

I saw your bum Paul! Your rear quarters were on display for all to see, and never mind that they were clad in some form of undergarment. It was a very untidy arrangement indeed and I suspect that, by their looks, those "pants" weren't strictly fresh. I was appalled, and suspect that my recovery from this trauma will never be fully complete.

My solicitor has advised me that a sizeable cash sum often soothes the nerves of the affected in a situation such as this, and that courts take a dim view of such occurrences. But, I'm a wealthy woman already and have no use for such a thing. However, as I am housebound through my traumatising, I suggest that an A1200 version of a "very good game" would suffice. Perhaps UFO, or Theme Park. I very much hope that you can find it in your heart to help restore some dignity to a person whose life you have pretty much destroyed.

Yours, lying in bed, shuddering at the thought of what I might stumble across in next month's issue.

Carolyn Mayhew, St. Neots, Cambs

I've never much cared for dignity Carolyn, especially not my own, and unfortunately we don't have the boxed copies of either of these games in the office yet. Never mind – I wouldn't like to think of you lying housebound empty handed, so I'll be despatching my "pants" just as soon as I've managed to scrape them off the inside of the industrial washing machine.

Talkback

► Thang thang

How are you? Not so good I imagine if the slagging off in issue 62 is anything to go by. Why put up with it mate? Get out and get a job where your talents are fully appreciated [Like, I haven't tried? – Paul]. I know I would.

Great to see AA getting back to the way things were. Issue 62 was the best I'd read in almost a year. But now come the downers. Can you tell me why Heimdall 1 and Heimdall 2 are in different Superleagues when the second version is just the first version with better graphics and different puzzles? Elite 1 and 2 are in the same league – seems strange don't you think?

Also, competition results! Please try to keep us up-to-date with winners and runners up as I thought I was in with a chance of winning the Team 17 limerick comp. But who knows – I haven't seen the results. Anyway, keep AA a quality mag so I have something to read at work.

Leighton Armstrong, Brighouse, West Yorks

The Superleagues mistake could be something to do with all of us here hating the things. And it's not just normal hate – we really loathe them with a vengeance. But more effort will be made in the future, I promise. Albeit through gritted teeth.

What else? Oh, competitions. Well, it's kind of a rule here that we never sort those out until we get a letter such as this asking about them. Consider them mid-sort, and look out for the winners from the last, what – eight months? – next issue. Or possibly the one after that.

Uh?...

How come Kick Off 2 is back up to 30 in the Superlea-

Matthew Breckenridge, Muttenz, Switzerland

Thank you... goodbye.

Funny, but...

I think Amiga Action is the best magazine going but– STOP! I've had enough of this. I'm gonna be frank and you probably won't like it but please hear me out.

I used to buy your magazine every month because it was entertaining, made me laugh, had good coverdisks, great reviews and tips and was 20p cheaper. But, quite honestly, the only great thing about the magazine nowadays is that it still makes me laugh.

After the reading's done and I've got my breath back and rid myself of the stitch, that feeling of anger, of being ripped off and being very disappointed sets in. Don't you people care about what us readers want?

It's easy to tell me not to buy it but that isn't why I'm writing. I want a good magazine to read that gives me and everyone what we want, and the satisfaction that our money's been well spent in buying the magazine for four quid. We all know that graphics don't make a game and I know that humour doesn't make a games magazine – I'd hate to turn elsewhere and feel as let down again. And anyway, you don't seriously expect me to buy  * do you?

Katherine Gillespie, Newcastle-upon-Tyne

O-kaaaay... but you don't exactly say what it is we're not doing right, do you? Perhaps it would take too long to list, eh?

Go away

If you are still looking for stories with links to famous people then–

Joe Duyer, West Bridgford, Nottingham

We're not! No-one sent in any decent ones and we got fed up so we're scrapping the whole bloody thing.

How do I?...

Firstly, I want to congratulate you on your brilliant mag. Ever since I got my Amiga a couple of years ago I have tried to buy every issue of Amiga Action. It's got a more lively attitude towards the Amiga than the other mags, which tend to bore me. Could you answer a few questions for me? Please... with a bit of sugar on top.

If you fancy writing to Paul, put pen to paper. However, you may be put off by this disturbing picture of him

1. Do you need special software to use a modem or does it have its own program?
2. Do you think we should gather up all the software pirates and shoot them?
3. If I purchased an emulator such as PC Task v2.0 to use on my fab A600 would it run many good games?

I think if software pirates, who really get on my tits, got their act together and became a little more loyal to the Amiga, prices would drop due to people buying more originals and not copies. Then maybe companies could make more games. If this happened I might have more than the six full priced games I have.

Gurjinder Bhella, Penn, Wolverhampton

PS I loved your monster PD coverdisk – it kept me busy for days. Keep up the good work!

Oh good, questions.

1. Our resident blandster Chicken informs me that you need a communications program of sorts, one of which is generally bundled in with the better modems. There are, however, several decent PD ones available.
 2. I think perhaps we should sort out the rapists and murderers first.
 3. Our resident blandster Chicken informs me that you should scotch all such ideas from your mind. Immediately.
- And you'd have more than six full priced games if you dipped your hand in your pocket more often.

Chris Davies

Chris Davies from Wrexham. Thanks for the letter Chris, it made us laugh. Unfortunately we can't print it for fear of reprisals from the company concerned, although we do share your sentiments. No, you probably wouldn't win a lawsuit, but you win a game from us for being a bit of a lad.

Mr. Blobby, Blobbyville

That's the funniest thing you've ever said mate, and by the left, you've come out with a few gems in your time. I look forward to the re-emergence of the Late Late Breakfast Show and pray that you'll be persuaded to indulge in a spot of bungee jumping. You fat unfunny get.

SWAP SHOP WORLD TOUR '94/95

Oh dear, I think I've overdone it. Unfortunately I've had a bit of an accident. You may recall that last month I had a hot date with page 59 of Fast Forward in downtown St. Tropez. Well, erm... I'm in hospital at the moment, suffering terribly from a back problem that just won't quit. I can't understand it - the date went great (if you know what I mean) and after packing up my bags and hoofing off to Poland on an overnight train, I was in fine spirits. But then it hit me - wham! Me ruddy back's out and it's killing. The nurse here says it's a result of too much physical activity. Can't think what she means, and besides, I've always had a strong distrust of overweight women who sport facial hair. Until next month then eh? Yee-ouch! Mind where you stick that loofah

To: The Home Computer Club, Swindon, SN3 4BR

Please accept my application and enrol me as a member of The Home Computer Club. I wish to receive the Program magazine reviewing future items for the Amiga.

Send me the introductory items whose numbers I have printed in the boxes provided. Should I decide to keep them I understand you will charge me the special offer prices (plus a total of £2.50 towards postage and packing). However, if I am not completely satisfied I may return them within 10 days of receipt. My membership will then be cancelled and I will owe nothing. As a member I agree to buy at least one item from each Program magazine, which I will receive every two months during my membership. I understand that the minimum length of membership is for one year, if after this time I wish to cancel, I may do so by giving one month's notice in writing. All software and books are described in advance in the free club magazine and are offered at up to 50% off recommended and published prices (plus postage and packing). Membership is subject to acceptance and we may consult a licensed credit reference agency who may record the search. I am over 18 years of age (if you are under 18, membership must be in the name of your parent or guardian. Please obtain their permission). Offer available in UK only.
